Supt. Hart takes the heat from teachers

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

With the teachers' union vote of no confidence in superintendent Stephen Hart last week, it appears that the school committee is following selectmen into a summer of discontent.

A union spokesman said last week that teachers overwhelmingly supported release of a statement which charges that Hart is not leading during a period of tight finances and stress caused by implementation of the state education reform.

"A strong leader will create a sense of confidence that the system will survive hard times," the vaguely-worded two-page statement said. "The Cohasset Teacher's Association regretfully declares that the Superintendent does not function in this manner."

Hart said that he wants to discuss their grievances with the teachers and school committee.

He said the release of the statement, and the silent protest staged by some 40 teachers during last week's school committee meeting, makes for dramatic head-

Paul Barry stops landfill powwow

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

After a selectman and resident publicly argued over a perceived credibility gap between town officials and ordinary citizens regarding Cohasset Heights Landfill, landfill owner Paul Barry said he's had enough.

"Let's go to court and take all this off the public officers in the town," the frustrated Barry said at a joint meeting of selectmen, conservation commission and health board Monday.

Two lawsuits Cohasset Heights has launched against the town have been on hold pending discussions of a recent "global settlement" offered by CHL which tied resolution of the lawsuits in with issues surrounding the operation of the landfill and the proposed landfill expansion.

Monday's meeting followed weeks of wrangling over Selectman Martha Gjesteby's release of the settlement proposed by CHL and how to proceed with discussions, only part of which could be held in private under the state Open Meeting Law.

Record crowds flock to annual Festival on Common

By James Loewenstein
Mariner correspondent

People came in record numbers to last weekend's Festival on the Common, festival chairman Rhonda Myers said.

Attendance is "much better than it's ever been," said Myers on Saturday. She later estimated that at least 12,000 people had showed up at the three-day festival, now in its 40th year.

Attendance was spurred by good publicity, sunny weather and, on Friday and Saturday, comfortable temperatures, festival officials said.

People came from Worcester, Chatham, Plymouth and Newton, sometimes driving 1-1/2 to 2 hours to the festival, Myers said.

They bought crafts and food at 107 booths set up on the Common, consumed 2,000 pieces of strawberry shortcake, enjoyed entertainment ranging from big band music to a Chinese dance performance, and admired displays of juried and other artwork.

On sale at one booth were boomerangs that a 17-year-old boy had made as a way to finance his college education.

Eric Hutchinson of Chepachet, R.I., had started his own boomerang business this year as an honors project at his high school, said his mother, Cindy Hutchinson.

"He's hoping to pay his way through college (from the sales), so we have quite a few craft shows lined up," she said.

"Everybody seems to like them," she added.

Children's book author Richard Wainwright of Dennis, who was selling his books at another booth, said he began publishing his work after suffering a life-threatening bout of hepatitis.

Doctors in Latin America, where he fell ill, gave him 45 days to live. Facing death, Wainwright wished that he had published a children's book manuscript he had written, but had laid aside in a drawer.

Fortunately, Wainwright recovered, and that manuscript became his first book, "A Tiny Miracle," which was published in 1987.

Cohasset's week

Spot light troublesome

The selectmen's office had a request this week to turn off the spot light that has been installed on the Common to light up the flag.

"The lamp is positioned in such a way that, in addition to the flag pole and common, it lights up my home, my yard, Beach Street and our neighbor's house," Richard Horn, 61 Highland Ave., wrote to Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon.

"Now that the weather has turned mild, I have been out in my yard in late evening and find it difficult to look in a westerly direction without being blinded. Similarly it is no longer enjoyable to sit on our front porch."

Horn said that he is certain that whoever installed the light didn't realize its impact.

"I would appreciate your interceding on my behalf with the appropriate town official so that the problem can be taken care of," Horn wrote. "The simplest and least expensive solution is that the light be turned off."

In a telephone interview, Doyon said he contacted Eastern Edison to ask them to change the light.

He explained that the light burned out recently and Edison may have replaced the florescent bulb with larger sodium vapor bulb which is less expensive to operate.

Doyon said he's had two telephone complaints in addition to Mr. Horn's letter.

Power outage explained

In a letter to Selectmen Chairman Merle S. Brown, an Eastern Edison official detailed the facts of a recent power outage on Beechwood Street.

Marc F. Mahoney, director of Transmission & Distribution, said extra line crews, troubleshooters, and tree crews were on standby due to the stormy weather April 4. At 6:35 p.m. that evening, an outage due to a downed tree occurred on Beechwood Street.

"Our troubleshooter responded to the scene 29 minutes after the outage started," Mahoney said. "He found a large tree had come down breaking pole #58 Beechwood Street and causing fuses to open at pole #49 Beechwood Street."

Mahoney said two line crews, a pole truck, the troubleshooter, and tree crew were needed to make the necessary repairs clearing the road in about 1-1/2 hours and restoring power in just under three hours to 294 customers.

"I hope you agree that Eastern Edison responded quickly and appropriately to this situation," Mahoney wrote. "This incident shows that we are prepared to provided excellent response when the weather forecast is accurate."

Selectmen have met with Edison officials on several occasions following the Northeaster last Christmas Eve, which left much of the town without power on Christmas, to discuss Edison's response to Cohasset power outages.

Hospitality tent denied

The Zoning Board of Appeals has sustained the building inspector's denial of issuing a building permit for a 20x30 ft."hospitality tent" at the Music Circus.

The Music Circus' applied for a building permit to erect the tent to remain in place throughout the summer on a grassy area at the front of the premises.

The Music Circus appealed the building inspector's denial of a permit on the basis that the tent is a pre-existing, non-conforming use like the main tent.

However, through the testimony at the April 6 public hearing, the zoning board determined that a second or hospitality tent has not been in continuous use at the site in a constant location since prior to adoption of the town by-law and therefore the tent would require a special permit.

"The fact that a tent has been erected from time to time since after the adoption of the bylaw does not confer protection on the tent," Clerk Barbara Power wrote.

Ambulance billing update

For the month of May, the fire department made 28 ambulance transports. So far this fiscal year, which ends June 30 the fire department has collected $81,764.95 in ambulance bills out of a possible $93,959.78 for a collection rate of 87 percent.

Mercury hovered near 100 degree mark

By Charlene Vandini
Mariner staff

Summer, 1995 didn't wait for the official start on Wednesday. With temperatures at or approaching the 90s for three days in a row, area residents tried to beat the heat with cool drinks, air conditioning, or a splash in the pool.

Justin and Emily at the Cohasset Swim Center reported more that 300 swimmers took the plunge there on Monday. They said the center on Sohier Street remained crowded for the entire day as many found it difficult to give up the relief provided by the pool.

For the second year in a row, the Annual Art Festival sponsored by the South Shore Art Center, had artisans, exhibitors and spectators seeking shade and cool drinks as the mercury rose.

But the event on Cohasset Common was spared the drenching thunderstorms of other years.

Information from Bob Skilling at the Hingham Weather Station put the official high temperature there on Monday at 93 degrees. Sunset provided little relief, with the temperature at midnight hovering above 80 degrees. It did finally drop to 69 early Tuesday morning, but resumed the climb to a high of 88 before a refreshing shift in winds from the east brought temperatures down to a more tolerable level in the low 80s.

Rebecca, manager of the Atlantic Bagel shop said iced coffee was the beverage of choice Monday. The shop dispensed "gallons and gallons" before it closed early, for lack of air conditioning. That situation has been remedied, she said.

Mike Kearney at the Dunkin Donuts shop reports a high volume of iced coffee sales there.

"We sold hardly any hot coffee in two days," he said Tuesday. But the cold version of the drink was popular, with sales at least triple.

Kearney said many beach-bound customers stopped at the shop to refill the large Dunkin Donuts travel mugs, and some took advantage of the air conditioning to "sit around longer than usual."

Skilling explained that the hot weather actually blew in from Canada. The "jet stream" was pushed into the southern Canadian provinces, which pulled the heat from the mid-western plains states across to the northeast.

Without thunderstorms that other areas of New England experienced Tuesday, the dry stretch continues, Skilling said. In spite of last week's rain, the month of June is showing a total rainfall of 1.74 inches, as compared to the normal 3.28 inches, for an annual rainfall deficit. For the first six months of the year, normal rainfall is 23.53 inches. So far in 1995, there has been a total of 15.42 inches of rain.

If you think it was hot here, Skilling offered the small consolation that Burlington, Vermont reached 100 degrees, Bangor, Maine reported a 96-degree reading, and thermometers in Concord, New Hampshire registered a high of 96 degrees. At International Falls, Minnesota, normally known as "America's Ice Box," Skilling said the mercury rose to 99 degrees for two consecutive days.

After a couple days of more moderate temperatures, Skilling said warm weather is likely to return at the end of the week.

The Summer Solstice, the official beginning of summer, occurred yesterday, June 21.

Sign variance denied

The Zoning Board of Appeals has refused to grant a variance to allow a logo sign on the Shawmut Bank at Cohasset Plaza off Route 3A by the Stop & Shop.

Shawmut proposed to put a logo sign on the side of the bank facing the parking lot entrance. There is an existing sign on the front of the building facing the highway.

The bylaw permits one accessory sign of no more than 25 square feet in area for each tenant in business districts. The addition of the proposed logo sign would increase the applicant's total signage to more than 47 feet.

"This regulation has been frequently appealed over the years, but has been scrupulously adhered to in decisions by both the planning board and board of appeals, in order to preserve an uncluttered appearance in business districts and to reduce distractions when driving," the appeals board wrote.

Drive-through window approved for Verc Mobil

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

At its June 7 meeting, the planning board made things just a bit easier for commuters in their perpetual early morning quest for a quicker cup of coffee.

VERC Mobil Cohasset, 190 King St., has been given the go-ahead to install a drive-through window at the station, which is on the corner of Sohier St. Customers would order coffee and pay at one part of the counter and pick up their purchase from a different employee to keep things moving.

The gas station already sells coffee and newspapers from a small (150 sq. ft.) store.

Paul Vercollone, who owns the franchise, said the window is intended to be a convenience for customers. He said he expects the window to generate a modest increase in business, perhaps some 25 cars per hour during rush hour.

"We're not changing what we do," he said.

The planning board members were concerned however, about traffic at the intersection at Rte. 3A and Sohier St.

They said that cars heading north on Rte. 3A routinely turn slightly into Sohier St. and then dart across into the Mobil station, creating a hazard for traffic coming down Sohier St. toward 3A.

The board made their approval contingent upon an extension of green space at the station along Sohier St. and improvements to the traffic flow, including making the first egress on Sohier St. an exit only.

That would force incoming traffic to proceed further down Sohier St. and slow down to turn left into the second curb cut.

Planning board member William Good said he had lived behind the station for nine years and agreed that traffic turning from 3A into the station via Sohier St. is the problem.

"I'm not an obstructionist and I'd like to see this," he stated.

"That is a dangerous spot. They come off 3A fast," said Bob Davenport, a health board member and Sohier St. resident.

He suggested closing the first curb cut altogether.

However, Vercollone said that is how the tanker trucks deliver gasoline to the station a couple of times each week.

Planning board chairman Alfred Moore said that was not a good idea to force the trucks to enter from the other curb cut since that would require them to approach the station from Sohier St., which would have required driving through the center of town.

He called the intersection "a tricky corner" and urged that the center island in Sohier St. be extended and pavement markings be clearer so vehicles would stick to the appropriate traffic pattern.

Planning board member Jean Simonds said she did not like turning off 3A onto Sohier St. only to have to stop because of cars waiting to turn left into the station.

According to the station's consulting engineer, Glen Doherty, the police department reports there have been six traffic accidents at the intersection or in the station area in the past three years.

Two accidents were caused when people backed into other cars at the gas pumps, while four occurred in the intersection. Of these, three accidents involved cars trying to turn south (left) onto Rte. 3A from Sohier St.

Fire Department Capt. Mark Trask urged that traffic be slowed down at the site and pointed out that the drive-through window could create traffic that would interfere with the pay phone and air pumps next to the building.

Vercollone said the phone and pumps will be moved and that the traffic lanes will be clearly marked so vehicles headed for the gas pumps will not get mixed up with those proceeding to the window.

Planning board members also questioned the anticipated number of cars waiting in line at the coffee window.

Gary Dean, traffic consultant, said that ten cars could be in the line before it spilled onto the street.

However, he said that since customers for the window are likely to be in a hurry, they would be more apt to go elsewhere or walk into the store to get coffee, than wait in a long line.

Although the meeting was pleasant and business like, the session opened with controversy.

Roberta Sawyer, Vercollone's lawyer, questioned the planning board's jurisdiction in the matter.

She maintained that since the window did not alter the footprint of the building, it could be constructed as a matter of right. Minor repairs and changes to an already approved building do not require planning board approval, she said.

"It's our position that we do," Moore said. "I tell people they don't have to be all that onerous. We have a reputation we don't deserve."

Also during the meeting, Moore read a letter from selectmen, which cited a number of similar traffic concerns.

Donald Staszko, an abutter who owns Cohasset Plaza across Sohier St., said he had no objection to the coffee window provided traffic flow was improved. He offered to water the traffic island, now maintained by Sue DiPesa, if the island is extended.

The planning board approved the Mobil site plan Jan. 4, 1989. In March, 1989, Vercollone applied to the zoning board of appeals for a variance to add a retail store. The ZBA granted the variance, but restricted the types of items that could be sold.

Vercollone appealed the restriction and the Norfolk County Superior Court overturned the restrictions on Dec. 14, 1993.

Concom, planning board, set to approve Shaw's

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

After months of grueling, detailed discussion town boards are ready to approve the Shaw's supermarket at Cushing Plaza.

The conservation commission Tuesday night closed its public hearing and agreed to draft an order of conditions, which will set the terms under which the project can proceed.

As the Mariner went to press Wednesday night, the planning board was also expected to give its blessing to the supermarket plan.

Those board members said two weeks ago that they would vote in support.

Shaw's executive Brian Leahy called the process "one of the most extensive," he has ever participated in.

The exhaustive public review has created "a very good project," he said.

Leahy also stated that the board of health has already approved the main septic system for the project, but that the smaller system at Bergson Ice Cream remains under review.

Although the zoning board of appeals has already issued a permit for the project, Shaw's still must return to that board for further discussion.

Most of the state permits have been obtained, but Shaw's still must get permission to make curb cuts in Route 3A, a state highway.

A building permit will also have to be issued before construction can begin.

Conservation commission chairman Roseanne McMorris said that board hoped to have its order of conditions ready by July 5, but that the process may take until July 18. Shaw's executives agreed to give the commission an extension of the mandatory 21 days to give them more time if needed to come up with its order of conditions.

Leahy said that once the legal and administrative issues are settled, construction would begin as soon as possible, hopefully in September.

Construction will be done in four phases, starting with Retail C and then following with Phase II, the demolition of the rear of the existing plaza.

Phase III is the construction of the main building and Phase IV would be the relocation of the tenants, demolition of the southern part of the existing plaza and construction of the septic system.

During construction, a closed tank septic system will be used.

He hopes to build the main building next spring, with the complex open sometime in the fall of 1996.

Almost half of the planning board and conservation commission members are in eligible to vote on Shaw's because they missed one or more sessions of the public hearings those board conducted.

Town counsel Richard Henderson has ruled that when a town board is performing quasi judicial (as opposed to administrative) functions, members must attend all sessions in order to vote. When members are not able to vote, and the number of those participating is subsequently reduced, Henderson a simple majority can decide an issue.

Planning board members Robert Sturdy and John O'Toole cannot vote on Shaw's. That leaves Alfred Moore, Jean Simonds and William Good.

Conservation commission members Roseanne McMorris, Robin Grinnell and Edward Graham missed sessions and cannot vote.

Concom members Thomas Callahan, Veneta Roebuck and Jeffrey Waal will decide the Shaw's issue.

Callahan said Tuesday night that although he favors most of the project, he does not support the construction of what is called Retail C on the plans.

This building would house a bank and dentist's office and would be located south of the Bergson building on Route 3A, toward the Hassan sign business.

Callahan said he objects to the building because it requires unnecessary destruction of wild areas.

In the future, Retail C could require its own septic system and additional parking, which would likely be built in the adjacent wetlands buffer zone, thereby isolating a wetlands area behind the site and reducing its value as a wildlife habitat.

He said that in the future the conservation commission could be told that parking or septic changes are needed for an existing tenant, presenting a hardship case that would be hard to refuse.

"The building C is dictating all this activity," Callahan told Shaw's executives. "If it didn't exist, the [illegible]uld be less disrupted. If it's never built it's not an issue."

Callahan indicated that he will propose a condition banning construction — except for the proposed tidal pond to hold drainage — in the portion of the Shaw's parcel which lies south of the proposed entrance, which would lie just south of the Bergson building.

A lawyer for Shaw's said that the company would sue to overturn that restriction if it were attached to the plan. Tuesday night the other two members able to vote on the issue — Veneta Roebuck and Jeffrey Waal — appeared to disagree with Callahan.

Roebuck appeared to reluctantly accept construction of Retail C. She reminded the group that although she had originally objected to Retail C and is still not happy with it, to prevent Shaw's from developing it would not necessarily save it from development.

That property had been owned by the Autohaus automobile dealership, which might have developed the site anyway.

Leahy reiterated that Retail C is necessary to the success of the project.

He explained that supermarkets are now typically at least 60,000 square feet in size.

The proposed Shaw's is only 40,000 square feet, smaller than their standard market.

"This is the smallest store we can build possibly build and stay economically viable," he said.

Leahy also said that the current Cushing Plaza includes 69,200 square feet located on nine acres. The Shaw's plan calls for an increase of 2,000 square feet of retail space on a total of 24 acres.

Stating that they have "a good plan," Leahy said that they had worked to keep some tenants now in the plaza, including the hair salon, Buttonwood Books and the Cohasset Consignment Shop.

He said these are not as economically desirable tenants as national chain store outlets would be.

"I think they've done a great job," said member Robin Grinnell, looking at the plans.

Town officals called the meeting to try and determine how to proceed not only with the lawsuits but with other landfill matters relating to financial security concerns and the proposed expansion.

Monday's two-hour meeting reached a climax following Selectman Jane Goedecke's motion saying any settlement not specific to landfill regulatory issues be brought before town meeting for approval. Goedecke was apparently trying to alleviate concerns of SAFE, a grass-roots citizens' group opposed to any expansion of the landfill, that selectmen might make a deal with CHL without public input.

Conservation Commission Chairman Roseanne McMorris said such action shouldn't be necessary.

"Cohasset Heights is an emotional issue," she said. "You are elected to be our executive board to cut through the emotion and lead us to a resolution."

Meeting regular Robert E Martin, 259 South Main Street, said he found the need for reassurance offensive.

"It's a sorry pass," he said. "When you have to assure public you're going to do what you're sworn to do."

But Mary Gainor, 168 Sohier Street, said she and her husband Charles got involved in SAFE because of the history of the landfill which grew out of a "stump dump" and how town officials, in particular the board of health, were not scrutinizing what was going on at the landfill.

"Those things made us edgy," she said.

Mrs. Gainor's statement riled Selectman Michael H. Sullivan, a former member of the health board.

Sullivan, who claimed the board of health was "on top of the issues" when he was a member, was incredulous that citizens don't trust their elected officials.

"I volunteer my time and do not to pull the wool over people's eyes," he said angrily and suggested that Mrs. Gainor ought to run against him if she's uneasy with the elected leadership.

That seemed to be enough for Barry, whose voice charged with emotion, took the floor. Barry, who said like the town, he's spent a lot of time and money.

"If the judges turn me down, I'll take it like a man," he said. "Tommorrow I'm going forward with the court cases and let the judges answer."

In April, Barry told town officials at a public meeting that he wanted to compromise to end years of litigation over the landfill's operations and offered several "alternatives" like paying higher tipping fees to the town. Currently Barry is limited to usign only about 20 acres of the 48-acre landfill site. He wants the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) to allow him to use all the site and to expand the scope of operations.

WHAT'S NEXT FOR CHL

Earlier in the meeting, town's special environmental counsel Michael Leon of Warner & Stackpole explained that aside from the lawsuits — the town was moving forward with addressing problems regarding the storm management system at the existing landfill. He said the board of health was dealing with operational concerns like site security, fencing and monitoring waste flows, and financial assurance mechanisms required at closure and post closure.

CHL could submit a supplemental final environmental impact report (EIR) for the proposed expansion at any time, Leon said. He explained that following the EIR which must comply with the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act (MEPA), CHL would have to file a site assignment application with the Department of Public Health and Department of Envirnomental Protection. Subsequent to the site assignment, Leon said is the "truly technical evaluation" of the facility design and operating proposal including financial requirements for closure and post closure. The town's board of health would have a role to play and CHL would need a special permit to operate area V from the zoning board of appeals.

"The town could assert significant authority under the special permit on aspects of the facility," he said.

School changes possible

At last week's school committee meeting, Linda Whitney, principal of the Osgood School, delivered two detailed reports on the possibilities of offering a full-day kindergarten and an integrated preschool program.

An integrated preschool offers programs to both special need students and mainstream students.

Whitney said that ten years ago only 32 percent of public preschools enrolled special needs students while now some 70 percent do.

She said that while space would currently inhibit Cohasset's ability to offer such a preschool, the idea should be investigated for the future.

Some towns charge preschool students, while others offer the program for nothing.

Whitney called data on the affects of a full-day kindergarten "inconclusive and conflicting."

She said that it is preferable to limit kindergarten class size to 15 students.

Some towns, such as Boxford, offer two kindergarten choices: everyone receives three full days, and parents can pay for two additional full days.

School committee chairman Ralph Kidder asked Whitney to come up with estimates for the staffing and training that would be necessary if the town were to offer either or both program in the future.

Questioning government

'Society in every state is a blessing, but Government, even in its best state is but a necessary evil; in its worst state an intolerable one.'
—Thomas Paine, Common Sense 1776.

Like it or not, there are passionate individuals and groups who are going to keep an eye on government at all levels.

They're the squeaky wheel, the agitators, and the activists.

Depending on your point of view, sometimes they're right and sometimes they're wrong.

We don't agree with the Coastal Coalition's anti-train stance for example. The group doesn't trust the MBTA, a government agency, and is determined to keep abreast of everything surrounding the proposed restoration of the Greenbush Line.

But although we don't support its objective — we vigorously support the group's right to protest, write, complain and do anything within the law to get its way.

In Cohasset, S.A.F.E. — a citizen's group opposed to any expansion of Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) — isn't going to sit back and let its elected and appointed officials make decisions regarding CHL without its input.

And while selectmen can say the town is being "tyrannized" by a few and that all citizens should sit back and let decisions be made in the name of "trust your government" — that just isn't going to happen.

Monday night, Mary Gainor of Sohier Street tried to explain why some people are edgy or uneasy about landfill settlement talks. She talked about private meetings allowing a "stump dump" years ago that later turned into a landfill. And she questioned whether prior boards of health have been as diligent in monitoring the landfill as they should have been.

Using his "volunteer" status as a cudgel, Selectman Michael Sullivan — a former board of health member — arrogantly told Mrs. Gainor to run against him if she didn't think he could do what's best for the town.

We think Mr. Sullivan is missing the point.

While appreciate all the hard work and long, often frustrating hours that the town's "volunteer" boards put in — no one is forcing any of these individuals to serve. We know they participate because they want to be involved in their community.

And under no circumstances should someone be made to feel obligated to run for office if they have a complaint or a concern.

Mr. Sullivan's remarks to Mrs. Gainor were "unselecman-like" at best. He owes her an apology and should refrain from intimidating any citizen from criticizing his opinions or the decisions of the board he serves or has served on.

Today many people wonder why anyone would want to run for office or be appointed to a public position at any level. Long meetings, late-night phone calls, public scrutiny, low or no pay, and the need for a thick skin are all part of the package. Luckily, Cohasset has been fortunate to have talented, dedicated citizens willing to serve.

No one ever said being a town official would be easy. Democracy — which is alive and well in Cohasset — doesn't always go as smoothly as everyone would like. There are laws like those governing Open Meetings and Public Records that can get in the way of "official" business and one-issue groups like S.A.F.E. which aren't going to take a back seat.

But both the elected and the electorate alike should keep in mind there's absolutely nothing wrong with questioning the process and being a government watch dog.

'Focus on CHL expansion fight'

To the Editor:

It appears that the "outline of global settlement" proposal from Cohasset Heights is dead, and that's good for the town. I guess that CHL just doesn't want to subject any negotiations about their proposed landfill expansion to public exposure or, even worse, to review and vote of a town meeting!

The "global settlement," which was originally intended to be kept secret and to be discussed only in executive session, would, if approved in any form, get us to give up the protection of our water resource district and to stop fighting the proposed 27.5 acre "Area V" CHL expansion.

Now, with the misleading "global settlement" off the table, I hope that town officials can focus again on fighting the expansion, winning the suit CHL filed against our town Water Resource District, settling the suit against the Conservation Commission, forcing CHL to provide sufficient financial assurances, and taking decisive actions to deal with the continuing odor problem and the potential threat to Lily Pond.

To the Editor:

The Town of Cohasset pulled together once again and put its best foot forward to thousand of visitors when it hosted Festival on the Common. Vendors and visitors came from all over Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island. We were complimented time and again on the beauty of Cohasset, the friendliness of the residents and the honesty of people at Festival. It was evident by the items in the lost and found — wallets, checkbooks, purchased treasures left by accident on the common — all reclaimed by thankful visitors.

It was a special year for the South Shore Art Center as we celebrate both our 40th anniversary and 40th annual Festival. Again, we were thrilled to have the addition of the 5th annual Harborfest and congratulate their organizers, Jim Lagrotteria, Bob Martin and Keith Knowles, on the continued success of their events: the ice cream festival on Friday, the traditional Saturday Pancake Breakfast, Sunday's fabulous Blessing of the Fleet, parade and Chowderfest, and their contributions to the Main Stage events organized by Gary Ritts.

And what can we say about the now-famous 5th annual Strawberry Festival at the Second Congregational Church ? It always attracts a crowd of people who look forward to their dessert specialty served with just the right amount of ambiance and flair. No matter how hot, you're always greeted with a smilel ike a long-lost friend and directed to a chair in the shade, Their tireless volunteers must be in the hundreds, and we gratefully acknowledge their liaisons to Festival, Craig Muir, Bill Adams, Wayne and Annette Sawchuck. We were also joined by the South Shore Community Center Cafe, the First Parish Cafe and Concert, the Cohasset Diversity Committee and the Cohasset Teen Center. Hope we will all be together next year.

The art center's Festival would not happen without the work of more than 400 volunteers and 34 committee chairs, unfortunately too numerous to mention, but we hope you know your value to us.

Art provides a festival for the eyes and spirit

By Alison Cohen
Mariner correspondent

Art is alchemy.

In the hands of the artist, paint and paper, wood and stone turn to something larger, more precious than the sum of their parts. And there are as many ways of expressing the world and people they live among, perceive and sense as there are eyes to see, hands to paint.

Nowhere was that more self-evident than in the big white tent on Cohasset common last weekend. In its meandering pathways, panels filled with paintings and photographs revealed the depth and breadth of the creative urge.

All this art came to town under the auspices of the South Shore Art Center and its 40th annual art festival. Under a brilliant blue sky, surrounded by the sun-washed splendors of Cohasset's historic district and punctuated by the splash and tinkle of the fountain in the common, the events of the festival unfolded over the course of a weekend.

In tribute to its fourth decade, organizers pulled out all the stops and filled their weekend with good food, good music and great art.

Anyone can point and shoot a camera, it takes an artist to see beyond the surface and find the essence of what lies before him. Perspective is everything in life and in art.

Julie Hawkins-Burnham captured a mother and child at rest, then used special effects to create a multi-layered image of what she aptly called "Dream Spirit," rated the photography exhibit's Best in Show.

Two photographers traveled far for their inspired photographs. Sean Enright captured two saffron-robed Buddhist monks against a background of prayer flags in sherbet colors. While Enright's first prize color photograph was filled with the play of colors, William McCarthy's teemed with life as bathers and worshippers crowded the banks of what viewers assume is the banks of the sacred Ganges River in "Varanasi, India."

Enright captured another first prize with "Jubilee Kitchen," an abandoned restaurant in a rundown part of town. The choice of black and white film perfectly captured the forlorn, mournful quality of his composition. At the other extreme, Becky Haletky captured the color and vibrancy of a city deli in "Late Night—47th Street."

Dining al fresco was the theme—with a difference — in S. Smith's "Lynched." Smith traveled to the backwoods of the rural south and found an African-American family with two deer carcasses hanging from a tree in the dooryard.

If "Lynched" was the gritty reality of life, Leigh M. Stephens' "Ballet Class" conveys another aspect of life and art. Her dancers were caught at practice, honing their art or resting from their artistic labors.

Photographers have always loved the contrasting lines and textures of architecture and nature.

One could almost suffer frostbite looking at the chill, spare lines of Paul Johnson's "Grange Hall" in winter. Enright garnered two more prizes with his architecturally focused "Prague" and "Spires," two views of ancient Europe.

Where "Prague" takes a long view of the backside of a city with its spires and towers in the distance, "Spires" is a tight view through an archway of the twists and turns, lines and angles of architecture.

Lines and angles were the order of the day in Nicolas Nobili's "Post No Bills, NY. Nobili found two signs, one atop the other, giving instructions to would-be purveyors and politicians. The signs were affixed to an old picket fence painted, slap-dash, in bold primary colors.

Festival-goers looking at the three views of the same building in Hawkins-Burnham's piece, "A Place in Time #3," all asked the same question, "How did she do that?" Hawkins-Burnham used special effects to create a warped and melting appearance to the clock tower and building on which she trained her lens.

The field of sculpture was small but precious.

A second prize was taken by one of the two vases sculpted out of single blocks of wood. Shaped and carefully polished to reveal the inner structure and the spirit of the wood, "Volcano's" gleaming curved and rough-textured knots and excresences lured viewers to touch, to caress the piece.

At first seemingly whimsical, a closer look at the third prize "Family Tree - Renewal" showed a deeper meaning. In its rocks and branches, feathers, clay face and hands and wise-eyed bird could be seen the will to persevere, to survive, to live.

Ted Hirsch's mixed media piece may have been one of the most heartbreaking exhibits in the show.

During the Holocaust, Jews messages, art work and diaries were tucked into hollow trees, nooks and crannies for safekeeping and for posterity. That drew on the tradition of leaving prayers tucked between the stones of Jerusalem's Wailing Wall. Hirsch hollowed out and hinged a log and created a slate book tied with rawhide to hold his "Shema" — Hebrew for "Hear!" Written on the tablets was a prayer that began "You who live secure/ In your warm houses/Who return at evening to find/Hot food and friendly faces/Consider whether this is a man,/ Who labors in the mud/Who knows no peace/Who fights for a crust of bread/ Who dies at a yes or a no."

Lanci Valentine, director of the South Shore Art Center; Rhonda Myers, festival chair; and Laura Carleton, director of development at the art center, enjoy the opening of "Mirror, Mirror," the first national exhibition at the Center that kicked off the Festival on the Common on Thursday, June 15.Tom O'Brien car companies is a new patron of the art center and was a principal sponsor for the Festival on the Common.

Best of show for the juried exhibition went to Mary McSweeney's "Running Sheep." This drawing of a lamb trying to keep up with its mama as she ran through the high grass of summer was rendered in charcoal.

First prizes showed the incredible range of the art submitted for consideration.

Joreen Benbenek pinned down the reality of winter in the city in his oil painting "After the Storm." Benbenek painted a city street, lined by brownstones. The winter sun reflects off the icy roads and the cars are stranded in the plowed-up snowbanks like so many fossils in the tar pits of La Brea.

Robin Grinnell pushed color to an extreme to capture the look and feel of "R. Carson Marshes," using the vibrant glow possible only in pastel. Michelle Meister took the opposite tack, using black and white with an antique-y feel about it in a monotype she called "Fog Over Marsh."

Maureen Stebbins opted for jewel-toned watercolors for her "Patterns in Nature," a still life filled with a riot of brilliantly colored flowers in a cobalt blue and white china vase on a snowy white lace doily. Donna Basile also submitted a still life — hers was a whimsical assemblage of cherries and string beans combined in the form of ballet dancers. This colored pencil piece, aptly titled "String Bean Cherry Dancers," took a second prize.

Flora ruled the canvas in Jean E. Reardon's second prize etching/collograph of luscious pink hydrangeas bedecked with green leaves. The fruit and vegetable kingdom provided the inspiration for Sarah Roche's botanical watercolor of "Cider Apples" so tart and wormy your lips puckered just looking at it.

The members' show demonstrated the remarkable range of talent at home in the South Shore Art Center. Top honors were taken by Jeanne Downey for her oil, "Kellogg's Place." This painting showed a farmhouse at high noon on a hot summer's day with the sun pouring down and turning everything flat and one-dimensional.

Katharine Smit's portrait of "Aaron" used pastels in warm hues to catch the tones of his skin and shirt — without losing sight of the sweet smile of this small child.

Sports themes garnered special awards for two other artists: painter Robin MacDonald-Foley and photographer Sean Enright.

MacDonald-Foley's acrylic painting showed a bicyclist speeding down a mountain path, surrounded by fields and foliage. Enright trained his lens on three runners on a track — capturing the look of agony and ecstasy as they poured heart and muscle into the effort.

At another place on the Common, you could have yourself photographed as the Mona Lisa. Duxbury artist Linda Keating had painted a replica of Leonardo Da Vinci's "Mona Lisa," but there was a hole cut out of the painting where Mona Lisa's face should be.

Festival goers were urged to stand behind the painting, stick their face through the hole, and be photographed.

"You, too, can be the Mona Lisa," a volunteer called out to a male visitor to the festival.

Six or seven festival goers had their dogs photographed as Mona Lisa, said Eleanor Gorman, secretary of the South Shore Art Center's board of directors.

The Mona Lisa gag is "a way to make the arts fun for everybody, and to take the seriousness out of art," she said.

Chuck Lathrop of Pembroke and Westley Reddick of East Bridgewater had created a sculpture on the Common consisting of five vertical, wooden beams jutting five to 14 feet upward from the ground and held upright with rope.

"When I first envisioned the piece, I felt like (the five vertical pieces) could be taken for five gods or spiritual beings" who would serve as protectors, Lathrop said.

Someone suggested the spiritual beings could protect the weather at the festival, he said.

In any case, something was responsible for the three days of sunshine at the festival, which followed a rainy week.

Attendance was so high that the Second Congregational Church ran out of strawberry shortcake for its Strawberry Festival, which is held across the street from the Cohasset Common, said Myers. Luckily, the shortage of shortcake occurred at 5 p.m. on Sunday — only an hour before the festival ended.

Instituting trolley service between the festival and an off-site parking lot has solved the festival's parking problem, Myers said.

In years past, people would park their cars on local residents' lawns, in front of their driveways, or next to the Common, which could pose a hazard to children who ran between the cars into the street, she said.

At one point during this year's festival, 300 cars were parked at the off-site lot, located at the South Shore Music Circus, she said. Although the trolley service started last year, this is "the first real year that it worked," she said.

Fire Department EMTs responded to two medical emergencies at the festival, said Fire Department Chief Roger Lincoln. A teenage girl had a seizure on Saturday, he said. She was treated at the scene and then released to the care of her parents, he said.

Also, a Fire Department ambulance transported a middle-aged woman from the festival to South Shore Hospital after she suffered chest pains on Saturday, he said.

Lincoln said that as far as he knew, neither incident was related to the festival itself.

"I think there should be a police officer (stationed) down there" who could instantly summon medical aid or alleviate traffic problems, said Police Chief Brian Noonan. He said he would probably insist that one be stationed at the festival next year. "We had to give out some tickets" to people who had parked illegally, he said.

lines but does not provide the basis for solid dialogue.

"It's helpful to the papers," Hart said. "It's good for news. It's not the best way to encourage change. It pushes people into positions."

For their part, teachers are unhappy with Hart for several staffing and policy decisions.

"We don't have any confidence in our superintendent," said Edward Leary, union spokesman.

"He (Hart) has displayed a lack of leadership skills," added Joel Antolini, union president.

The school year ended on a tumultuous note, with students in an uproar over a schedule change which resulted in the loss of a week's vacation.

In an unrelated controversy, last week students staged a protest over the decision to lay off popular English teacher William Kite, a situation which is apparently being questioned by the union.

The timing of the union's action appears to indicate that the situation with Kite was the last straw for teachers.

For some time, some teachers have been critical of the administration for dismantling the business department earlier this year and for the use of interns to handle teacher's duties, which Antolini said in last week's Mariner was a violation of the teacher's union contract.

In their statement, teachers imply that an insufficient school budget has caused unnecessary staffing reductions. They blame Hart for not taking a tougher stand in budget negotiations with other town officials.

Although the statement does not mention the school committee, criticism of Hart on budgetary grounds at least indirectly targets that board, since it is ultimately responsible for the education budget.

Asked if that is the case, one teacher, Osgood School's Denise Yess, refused to comment. "That letter says it all," she stated.

The teacher's document said: "He (Hart) has failed to rally the town around its school system. As a result, the school budget process consistently involves the acceptance of inadequate funding because he does not effectively challenge the Town of Cohasset to fund its schools to match its high expectations. While other towns pass overrides in the millions of dollars, he allows the Town of Cohasset to believe that funding a faction of its real needs is acceptable for the School System."

Later the statement read: "Important decisions affecting the schools are based, not on a firm commitment to what is best for the students of Cohasset, but on what is best for the budgetary process."

Hart, who said the union did not present him the statement until Tuesday, said that charge is unfair.

He pointed out that Cohasset has voted to override Proposition 2 1/2 for education five times since 1988, most recently last May.

Hart said that because getting an override passed can be tricky, he has not wanted to push for an amount that would be rejected by voters, leaving the schools worse off.

In the May override, voters approved $358,000, of which roughly $180,000 was earmarked for the schools.

Although the override passed with 56 percent of the vote, the superintendent pointed out that still some 44 percent voted against the question.

"Had we asked for more (money) and that had been turned down, it would have had a devastating impact," Hart said.

Many teachers reportedly believe that letting Kite go would not have been necessary had a larger override been passed.

Hart said that hindsight is always perfect. "It's very easy to look back. People make decisions based on the best information that they have," he said. "All of us would like to see more money."

He noted that the advisory committee plays an important role in determining the budget.

Hart originally proposed a budget for the upcoming fiscal year that would have increased by 9 percent. After discussions with the advisory committee and selectmen, the school committee agreed to request a 5.1 percent increase.

The municipal side of the budget was virtually level funded.

At a meeting between the advisory committee, school committee and selectmen on Feb. 15, several selectmen said they were disappointed that the departments under their control were essentially level funded.

Advisory committee chairman Nancy Adams Roth said that she did not want to propose an override request of $525,000, which would have given the municipal government more money, but faced a greater chance of defeat at the polls.

Hart said that the school committee and the town as a whole have made a commitment to education.

"I think the school committee is doing the best they can," the superintendent said, noting that in many other towns, education budgets have suffered greater reversals than in Cohasset.

Asked about Kite, Hart said that the teacher's contract stipulated that the most recently hired person be let go.

He said Kite is receiving an involuntary reduction in force, which means the teacher will be rehired within 24 months if a position becomes open.

The teacher's statement went on to charge that because "poor management practices have been allowed to continue, staff morale is at its lowest point in years."

The letter said that trust is lacking between teachers and administration.

"I don't really understand exactly what is meant there," Hart said, "Decisions are made that have to be made, that aren't popular with every constituency."

Earlier in the year, Hart said that the business department should be abolished to make room for the increased student course load mandated by education reform.

He said at the time that students planning to go to business schools would not be penalized since those institutions do not require incoming students to have taken business courses, rather, they require the basic core curriculum which Cohasset emphasizes.

The administrator stressed that staff, particularly teachers, are invited to participate in the running of the school system.

"I feel our teachers have been very involved," he added, citing the faculty senates at each school and the Superintendent's Advisory Council, which includes teachers.

Moreover, Hart said that the faculty has participated in hiring of teachers and principals.

The union charged that Hart "has failed to provide a clear educational vision for the schools."

For his part, the administrator said, "I think we have a clear educational vision. Some people may not have opened their eyes to it."

At a meeting held at the Deer Hill elementary school June 15, some 95 percent of the teachers in attendance voted to released the statement expressing no confidence in Hart, according to Leary.

Later that evening some 40 teachers attended part of the school committee meeting, attempting to read the document but were told by school committee chairman Ralph Kidder that the meeting was not an appropriate place for that discussion. He agreed to meet with the union at another time.

After silently watching, most of them standing, for nearly an hour and a half, the teachers walked out of the meeting. Outside they declined to discuss their specific grievances.

Later, Kidder called the union action "an inappropriate thing to do," and welcomed them to meet with the committee to discuss the situation.

Osgood options on table

As the Mariner went to press Wednesday night, the school committee and administration were set to begin discussing what to do with the Osgood School with architectural firms.

Superintendent Stephen Hart said t[illegible] 18 firms responded to the department's request for proposals and that seven of them will be interviewed.

The committee had planned to talk with two firms Wednesday (June 21) and will meet with three more Monday, June 26 at 7, 8 and 9 p.m. Wednesday, June 28, two more interviews are scheduled, for 7 and 8 p.m.

All interviews are scheduled to take place in the high school audio visual studio.

School committee chairman Ralph Kidder said they have three choices: repair the Osgood School; build a new elementary school; or build a middle school and probably reassign grades.

However, Kidder said that while the architects have been asked to address those options, the committee is open to suggestions.

"We're pretty sure we're not smart enough to think of everything," he said.

School committee member Nancy Sandell said construction of a middle school is the favored choice.

Kidder said that would involve the most construction.

State aid is expected to pay for much of the construction of a new building, while it is unlikely the town would receive much or any state money to fix the Osgood School.

According to Kidder, the state Department of Education's Division of School Governance prefers to give money to buildings that are expected to last at least 50 years.

In the past year, more schools have been built in the state than at any time in the past 20 years.

Water restrictions in effect

All Cohasset water department customers are asked to follow an odd/even watering schedule. Those living in even-numbered houses are able to water on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. Residents in odd-numbered houses may water on Wednesday, Friday and Sunday. There will be no watering on Mondays.

Summer water restrictions still remain in effect because all distribution improvements have not been completed, water department officials said.

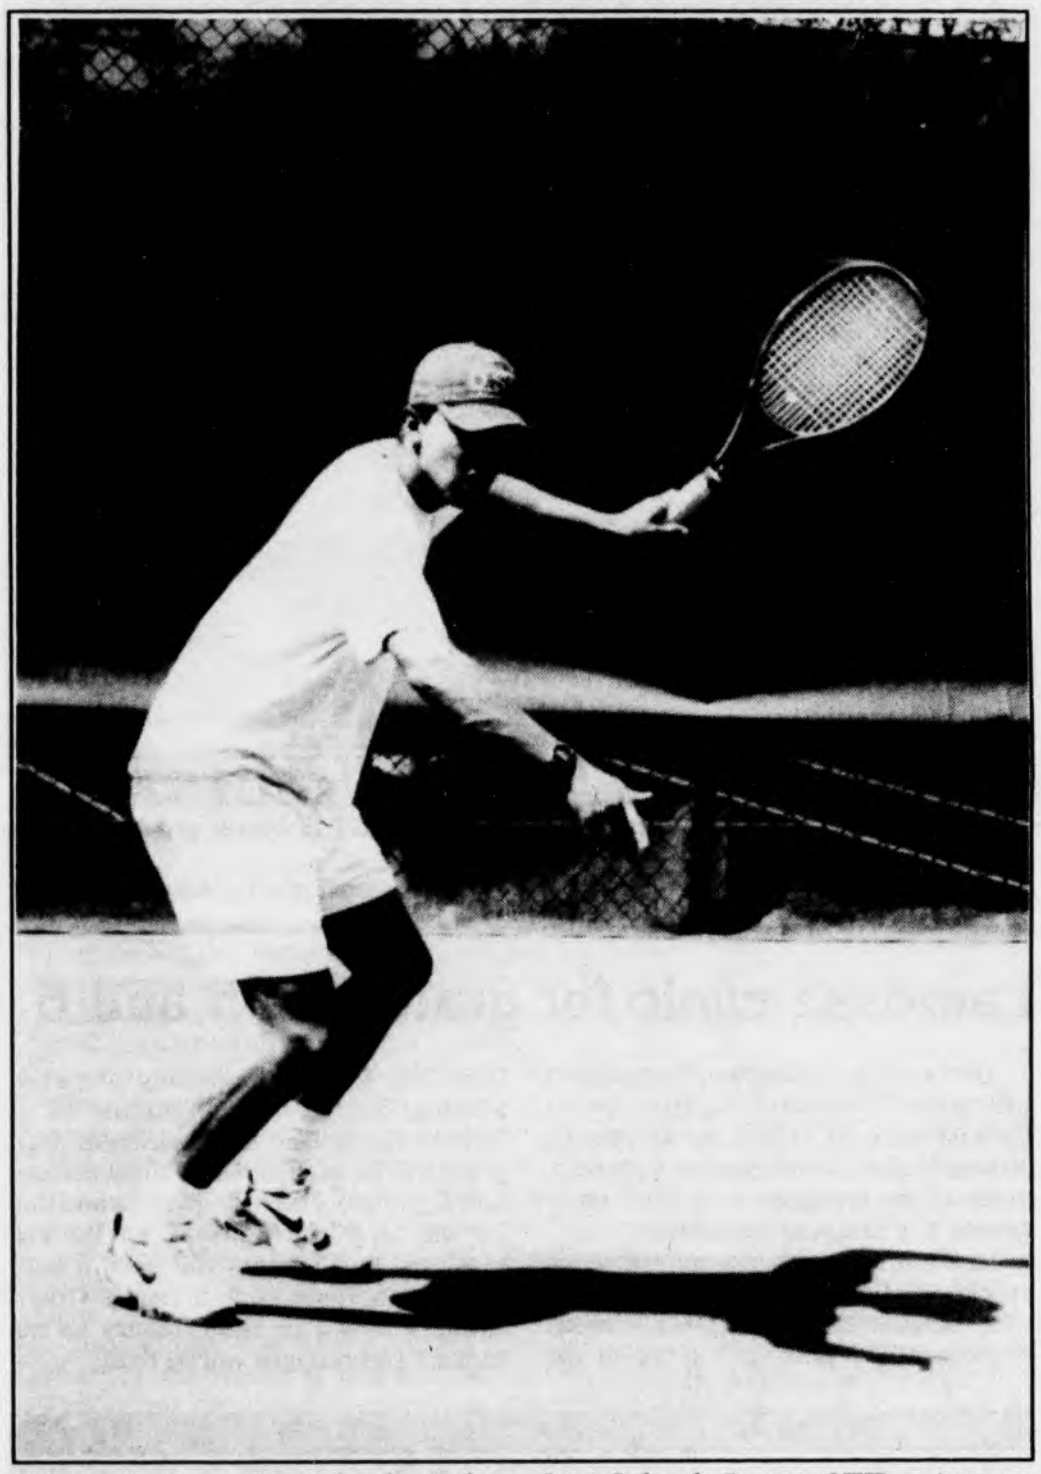
Thirteen is lucky number for tennis All-Star

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

No matter how you look at it, Cohasset's Drew Pozatek is one of the best 18-and-under tennis players in New England. The recent Milton Academy graduate and Independent School League champion is currently 13th in the New England Lawn Tennis Association (NELTA) rankings.

But Pozatek, who will attend the University of Pennsylvania in the fall, is hardly a stepping stone for the 12 players in front of him. Pozatek put together a nifty 13-1-1 record at No. 1 singles for the 15-0 Mustangs, winners of the ISL. He was selected both team and league MVP, as well as being named to the Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic team for the second consecutive year along with his first Boston Globe squad honor.



Cohasset's Drew Pozatek, the Independent Schools League MVP, returns a serve during a Milton Academy tennis match.

At the May 22, New England Championships in Windsor, Connecticut, Pozatek finished fourth overall in the "A" Singles Division and beat some stiff competition along the way.

Seeded fourth, Pozatek beat No. 2 seed Ned Wheeler in the semifinals. Wheeler is NELTA's sixth-ranked player. The finals went down to the wire as Westminster's Gabe Saverhoff, the No. 7 player in New England, outlasted Pozatek 6-4, 6-4.

Pozatek admitted he was tired by the time the finals rolled around, but took nothing away from Saverhoff's victory.

"That was my fourth match of the day," he said. "It was close, a couple of points her and there. He's a good player though."

Pozatek also beat the No. 9 player twice during the season and lost a tight 6-3, 7-6 match to the fourth-ranked player. "The top four are ranked in the top 50 in the nation," Pozatek said. "The players between five and 15 are pretty close."

Pozatek's rise through the rank's of the Milton Academy tennis program has been a steady one. As a freshman he was the No. 7 player on the squad and moved up to six during his sophomore year. Pozatek's breakthrough year came during his junior year when he took home second place in the ISL meet and sixth in the New Englands as the Mustang's No. 1 player. He has captained the squad the past two seasons.

Well aware of his strengths, Pozatek knows when his serve and strong forehand shot are on he can be very tough to beat. "My goal in a game is if I can serve well and hit my forehand, I can usually win a match. That's what propels me as a player."

Pozatek, whose older brother Steve also played for Milton Academy, competed in his first tourney at the age of 12. He decided to give tennis a try after his brother started and found it an enjoyable sport.

"My parents encouraged it," Pozatek said. "It's a good sport. I got into it and liked it."

As much as he enjoyed tennis, Pozatek was hardly going to give up playing soccer, baseball, basketball and lacrosse at such a young age and pour his energy into one sport.

Pozatek was especially proficient at skiing and raced in New Hampshire every weekend during the winter months. He qualified for the Junior Olympics in the downhill at 16 and competed at Sugarloaf. By the time he graduated from Derby Academy in Hingham, Pozatek knew he had to choose between the two.

"When I left Derby and was concentrating on tennis, it would have been tough getting up north," Pozatek said.

Pozatek's young career hasn't been without its setbacks. Over-use injuries plagued his game on and off for four years. He missed two months with a back injury, nine months with a bad knee and was shelved for a year because of shoulder pain. It was the classic case of doing too much too soon and not giving the body a chance to recover.

"It was frustrating," Pozatek said. "The reason it happened was I played too much and I had a scrawny body. My body wasn't able to keep up with how much I was playing."

Pozatek began a weight-lifting program to help strengthen his muscles and hasn't had any major injury problems since.

This summer he plans on playing in extra points

by Joe & Dave

With the the crowning of the state champs, the spring high school sports season has officially come to a close.

The Extra Points crew didn't see every game or every athlete but that hasn't stopped us before. Anyway, here are some awards for the '95 season.

Best team to win a state title award-Archbishop Williams baseball.

The Archies rolled through the Division 3 tourney dropping South Shore League powerhouses Hanover and Norwell along the way. Many teams thought they had more talent but the Archies executed on the field.

Best team not to win a state title award- Hingham High boys' lacrosse team.

For the third straight season the Harbormen reached the EMass Final Four. And for the second straight season, the Harbormen were bounced by the eventual state champs late in the tourney. (Lincoln-Sudbury last year and Newton North this year.) However, with high-scores Rich Santoro and Mike Sheridan and top defender Ryan Hanrahan all back, Hingham might end their title drought in '96.

Biggest tennis surprise award-the Marshfield High girls' and Scituate High girls'.

The Lady Rams looked to be in a rebuilding season however no one told that to the players and coach Roberta Daniele.

Eighth-grade first-singles player Kristin Modell and freshman second-singles player Kate Sibley were big helps as Marshfield tied for the Atlantic Coast League title with Duxbury.

As for the Lady Sailors, they rolled to a perfect regular season record, a South Shore Championships and the Division II South semi's.

Top singles players Stacia Poulos and Leslie Wlodyka anchored the talented line-up.

Co-coaches Judy Mullin and Eleanor Hayes have a great perspective on sports and they have all top-seven players coming back next season. Yikes.

The All Good Things must come to an end award-Norwell High girls' track.

After winning 114 straight dual meets, the Lady Clippers finally had their unbeaten streak snapped by Scituate High and coach Bill Smith.

The Lady Sailors then cruised to the Class D state championships the following week.

The Lady Sailors had three strong throwers (Regen Steverman in the javelin, Laura McGlynn in the discus and Danielle Hickey in the shot put) to lead the way. All three won Class D state titles and scored 30 of the Lady Sailors 62 points at the state's.

As for Norwell, don't cry for the Lady Clippers as they return talented distance runner Lisa Sammartino and all-around talent Sara Hurley for '96.

The Batmen Forever award-Silver Lake baseball.

The Lakers reached their first post-season since the early 80s and proceeded

I'd rather be swimming!

Chris Kondrat does some weeding around the steps leading from the parking lot up to the Cohasset Swim Center. Tryouts for the Cohasset Swim Team will be held on Friday, June 23, from 9-10 a.m. Team results will be posted that afternoon.

Buick leads JV lacrosse over Weston-Wayland

By Terry Kahn
Speical to the Mariner

Cohasset's JV lacrosse team hammered Massachusetts Bay Youth Lacrosse (MBYL) Central Division champ Weston-Wayland, 8-2 Sunday, despite fielding only nine players. The game was one of three the Skippers played at the third annual MBYL Jamboree.

Led by captain Jamie Buick's three goals and two assists, the Skippers "played their guts out," according to coach Chuck Jaffe. "I couldn't have possibly been prouder of them," said Jaffe, who added that seventh-grade goalie Kevin DeVito had his best game of the season against Weston-Wayland. "He stoned them," said Jaffe.

The Skippers were placed in the Jamboree's elite division, facing west champ Sudbury and New Hampshire champion Nashua. Despite the lack of substitutes, Cohasset played both teams tough, losing to Sudbury 6-5, and to Nashua 11-8, after jumping to a quick 5-0 lead.

Against Sudbury, Buick had three goals, and Tucker Gledhill two. "Those two players are as good as any we've seen the entire year," said Sudbury coach John Urban after the game.

In the Nashua contest, Buick added four more tallies, while eighth-grader Jake Motley had a pair and John Kasemeyer, Pat Leahy and Gledhill added one each.

Seventh-grade attackman Matt Pilczak scored versus Weston-Wayland, as did Motley (two) and Gledhill (two). Other Cohasset players making the trip were defensemen Tom Leahy, whose one shot in the Weston game glanced off the goal pipe, and seventh-grader Stefan Vanderweil.

"This team came a long way this season," said Jaffe.

Girls' softball steams on in the heat

After last week's rain and days with no games, the 1995 Cohasset girls' softball league is once again playing ball. This week's highlighted team is the Pirates.

THE WINNING CHANT OF THE PIRATES CHAMPS
By The Pirates' Coaches
Special to the Mariner

One, we are the Pirates
two, a little bit louder three, we still can't hear you four, more, score more!

Yes, ladies and gentlemen, this is what you hear coming from the dugout when you watch the Pirates play ball! Their improvement over six games has been solid and steady. They have bonded together as one great team and are now enjoying a very successful season!

There is great excitement with Kristen James and Elisa Gerome and their new-found batting skills, along with Kristen Lavigne's effort when up to bat! These three girls have become very confident in their batting techniques. Kelly Hurley with her winning smile is a good all-around player in the dugout and on the field. She is an inspiration to the team! Watch out, fans! When Tess Foley gets a piece of the ball, you know it's going to be a mighty hit. Did any of you fans happen to notice the fancy footwork by Ashley Faber? All we can say is, "Way to go, Ashley!" Allison Earon is an enthusiastic catcher and her ability to make those great catches cannot go unnoticed. Julia Scribner's fantastic play in the outfield shows she is an all-out excellent fielder. Holly Dinsmore has come a long way as a solid all-around player. Watch her running those bases with great force! Look out for Heather Peraino's take-charge attitude on the field. She really shows her team what covering the bases is all about. When Meaghan Rizzotti is on the pitcher's mound and Kerri Costa is at first base, they are a winning combination that cannot be beat. And you can bet no runners will make it to third base with Krista Nicynski playing shortstop and Nicole Needle at third. There is another winning combination!

The Pirates are a unique team! Since the girls switch positions every inning of every game, they now have the ability to play any position given to them. The Pirates are sponsored by the Fowler House and are coached by Bill Earon, Deborah Scribner, Sue Rizzotti and Lisa Costa.

Between the Fowler House and the coaches, there is great pride in the team because it shows good sportsmanship with great enthusiasm! Everyone has had a ton of fun while learning the game! A big thanks goes out to the whole team and to the Pirates' fans!

men's NELTA tournaments beginning at the end of June straight through August. He also will be giving lessons at the Weymouth Tennis Club for 11- to 14-year-olds. Pozatek enjoys teaching the kids, but hesitated when asked if he'd like to coach at a higher level once he is through with his own career.

"I teach kids who are beginners and young tournament players," Pozatek said. "It's not a career choice but it's something I'll do during the offseason through my college years."

His main goal at this point is to continue training for the University of Pennsylvania team. The squad is a tough one, having finished third in the Ivy League this spring. Pozatek generated interest from several Division 1 schools but decided on UPenn. He'll attend UPenn's business school, Warton Undergraduate School.

Pozatek is more than happy with his choice. "I like city schools and my mother's from Philadelphia," he said. "I liked the school a lot."

Pozatek isn't exactly sure where he'll fit on the tennis team, but his goal is to make varsity. However, he believes it may take until his sophomore year to break into the varsity roster.

His tennis plans could stretch beyond college. Pozatek will assess where he is at upon graduation and then make a decision whether or not to continue.

"I think it'll depend on where I'm at," Pozatek said. "After college a lot of players go on the satellite tour. It's sort of like the minor leagues."

For now, Pozatek is working on heading straight for the majors. That No. 13 rank could improve even more by the end of the summer.

The Lakers were led by senior lefty hurler Lou Chighisola (who did not allow an earned run during the regular season) and senior centerfielder Chris Watson (co-MVP of the Old Colony League.)

Bob Rodgers, who is a NESN sports anchor when not coaching the Laker Batmen, is hoping this is the start of a something big for the program.

Players we'll miss watching award-Silver Lake's softball catcher Tracey Troup, Silver Lake's Watson, Norwell sprinter and four-year track star Alyssa Stewart, Hingham High all-star catcher Corey Farina and Marshfield High softball standouts Heather Belmosto (second base,) Sarah Morrell (pitcher) and Christine Doherty (shortstop.)

* * * * *

The 90-degree temperatures that gripped Eastern Mass on Monday put a chink in many peoples' favorite outdoor activities. Either they decided to skip their workouts completely or cut back. Still, even in the sweltering weather, the macho men (and women) seem to have something to prove by going out and doing the exact same workout they'd do on a fall day.

There are several things you should remember when it comes to training in the heat, whether it be biking, running, rollerblading, walking or any other rigorous activity.

— Wear light-colored clothing which reflects the sun's rays.

— Be sure to drink at least 12 glasses of water a day in hot weather. It may sound like a lot but it goes down pretty easy if you follow an active, healthy lifestyle. Eight is the recommended daily average for the everyday person.

— Forget about running a fast time in your road races. The important thing to remember is hot weather affects your times all the more. And you'll feel a lot warmer once your body temperature starts going up.

— Cut back on alcohol consumption. While you may feel as though you are hydrated, alcohol actually dehydrates the body. That's what causes headaches the morning after a night out drinking.

— Stop your activity if you feel dizzy, light-headed or nauseous. Save the workout for another day. You'll be better off for it.

— Pick the coolest parts of the day to run. Early in the morning and evening are best. Activity in the middle of the afternoon can be a complete drag.

— Never try to lose weight by exercising in sweats during hot weather. All you're losing is water weight. The key to losing weight is not a great mystery. The trick is to burn off more calories than you consume and eliminate fat from your diet. It's the easiest way, but for some reason people look for shortcuts so they can rationalize stuffing their faces with the best of Sara Lee.

— Water is the best liquid replacement, but it's also important to drink a lot of fruit juices to replenish the vitamins in your body.

And finally...

— Hang out in the editorial department of the Mariner for an hour or two. The place is an ice box and there's no chance of suffering from heat stroke. It's cold in the summer, too. Happy training!

In case of rain the bells may be heard from parked cars.

The June 25 program will be performed by Gideon Bodden, carillonneur of the Mint Tower in Amsterdam, The Netherlands. Following the recital listeners are invited to meet the recitalist in the church courtyard and to tour the tour. During the tour there will be a demonstration of the instrument.

On July 3 the guest artist will be Geert D'hollander, carillonneur of Antwerp, Belgium. Peter Langberg, director of the church music school at Logumkloster, Denmark, will play July 10.

On July 17, Stephen Schreiber of Blue Bell, PA will be heard and Frank DellaPenna, carillonneur of Washington Memorial Chapel at Valley Forge will perform on July 24.

On July 31 Daniel Kehoe of Trinity College, Hartford, CT will perform; on Aug. 7, Judson Maynard of New Haven, CT will be featured. Aug. 14 Terence McKinney of Allston, MA will be the carillonneur, with John Gouwens of Culver Academy, Culver, IN presenting a recital on Aug. 21.

The final recital will take place on Aug. 27 and will be given by Sally Warner, carillonneur of St. Stephen's Church. Her program will include requests submitted by listeners at previous recitals.

For further information call St. Stephen's at 383-1083 or Sally Slade Warner at (508) 475-2599.

Drama workshop sign-ups

The Cohasset Recreation Department is holding sign-ups for the summer drama workshop's production of "Beauty and the Beast."

Rehearsals will take place at the Deer Hill School during July and at the Cohasset Town Hall Auditorium thereafter. Rehearsals will begin Wednesday, July 5 from 1 to 3 p.m., Monday through Thursday. The program, directed by Elizabeth Deveney, is being held in conjunction with the playground program, but is open to any child who is interested. Deveney is founder of the Children's Summer Drama Workshop and has directed the program for the past five years.

The fee for a child enrolled in the playground program is $68 and the charge for an unenrolled child is $78.

Telephone registrations will be accepted and may be made by calling the recreation office at 383-6791. Sign-up may also be done in person by stopping by the recreation office. Early registration is advised. Non-Cohasset residents will be accepted on a space-available basis.

Perennial & bulb sale set

The Norfolk County Conservation District is sponsoring its annual Fall Perennial and Bulb Sale. Tulips of all colors and yellow, white and mixed daffodils will be featured. Other bulbs include crocus, hyacinth, muscari, bearded and dutch iris and amaryllis. Perennials include daylilies, hosta, bleeding heart, sedum, peonies, pachysandra and myrtle.

The NCCD is a nonprofit organization. Proceeds will be used to fund household hazardous waste collection days, high school scholarships and Camp Farley scholarships throughout Norfolk County.

To request an order form and description sheet, send a 32-cent stamp and address to the Norfolk County Conservation District, Bulb Sale, 400 Main St., Walpole, MA 02081. The deadline to receive the order form is July 14.

Last year Cohasset received a $1,000 grant from NCCD toward its household hazardous waste collection day.

Old Ship yard sale

The Old Ship Church, Hingham, will hold its third annual Community Yard Sale June 24, rain or shine, from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Old Ship Parish House, 107 Main St.

An eight-foot leather Victorian sofa donated for the event will be featured. Church booths will include a snack table, large and small antiques, furniture, housewares, games, toys, vintage table linens and bric-a-brac.

Residents of area towns are invited to reserve a table and sell their own goods. Deadline for reservations is June 22 at 9 p.m. To reserve a table or for further information, call (617) 545-7157.

Guided busway system greeted with skepticism

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner Staff

There are many more questions than answers for South Shore residents as state transportation officials continue to pitch the Greenbush "busway plan" as an innovative, exciting and feasible transportation alternative.

"Overall, the guided bus system is simple in concept and execution," said state Transportation Secretary James Kerasiotes.

What might not be so simple is funding a Greenbush transportation solution. Reports from Kerasiotes office this week indicate that the 80 percent in federal funds has been diverted to other state projects like Boston's "Big Dig," and whether its commuter rail or guided buses, taxpayers will foot the bill.

Newly embraced by Kerasiotes the busway concept is not a new idea, but may be unfamiliar to many because it was not among the nine transportation

Planning board okays Shaw's, praises plan

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

It's official: the planning board last week approved the Shaw's supermarket proposed for Cushing Plaza.

"It looks like it's off to the races with the new Shaw's," said planning board chairman Alfred Moore, adding that the new plaza will be good for Cohasset.

"They (Shaw's) did as professional a job as I've ever seen," he said. "This was certainly first class."

In his nine years on the planning board, Moore said this was the biggest plan he has dealt with.

The project includes a 40,000-square-foot supermarket and another 30,000-square-feet of additional retail space on the 24-acre site.

For their part, Shaw's executives said several times during the process that this was one of the most complete proposals the giant supermarket chain has ever submitted.

According to unofficial estimates, the supermarket giant is believed to have spent $50,000 to develop and present the plan. This sum includes some $12,000 to pay for the town's exhaustive engineering review.

Latest landfill filing to be focus of public hearing on Cohasset Heights

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Selectmen will ask the state to schedule a public hearing within the next few weeks to help citizens understand how to comment a new report Cohasset Heights Landfill has filed with the state on its proposed expansion.

Through the Comprehensive Site Assessment (CSA) report, owners of the privately-owned landfill hope to obtain state environmental approval which could move the expansion process out of the study stage.

CHL, which is off Route 3A near the driving range, proposes expanding its facility into 27.5 acres including landfill, recycling and materials processing operations.

The state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) has 60 to 90 days to review the CSA and the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act (MEPA) has 30 days, explained John K. McNabb, Jr. of S.A.F.E., a citizens' group opposed to the expansion.

Although the CSA is not the same as an Environmental Impact Report (EIR) for "our intensive purposes it is the same thing," McNabb explained.

Last August in her certificate on the latest EIR filed by CHL, state Environmental Secretary Trudy Coxe said another supplemental final EIR was needed to provide additional information.

McNabb said the CSA, which includes an appendix summary of everything analyzed in the past five EIRs,

Cohasset's week

Carbone Lane on agenda

A conservation commission discussion of the fancy Carbone Lane housing development, which was to have taken place this week, was postponed at the request of the applicant until Wednesday, July 5.

That evening the commission is also expected to consider a notice of intent from the Cohasset Yacht Club, which plans to reconfigure the club docks.

The Cohasset Heights landfill is also on the agenda for July 5.

The meeting starts at 7:30 p.m. and will be held on the second floor of town hall.

The public is welcome.

Applause for Grinnell, Walsh

The conservation commission took time out from its crowded agenda June 20 to offer a round of applause for departing commissioner Robin Grinnell and to secretary Pat Walsh.

Commission chairman Roseanne McMorris thanked Walsh for staying late to help out the previous night.

"I think we all appreciate that we have a secretary who will help us at a moment's notice," McMorris said.

Pointing out that it was Grinnell's last meeting on the commission, McMorris thanked her for service to the town in general and to the cause of conservation in particular.

Grinnell said she has enjoyed the work and will miss the group.

Associate member Susan Cope will take Grinnell's place July 1.

Path to pond approved

Although the pond may be straight, the road beside it certainly isn't.

In fact, Paul Shea, conservation consultant, said June 20 that Jerusalem Road is so curved in both directions near Windy Hill Road that visibility is completely blocked.

He said anyone in the road risks being hit by a vehicle.

Shea, executive secretary Greg Doyon, and about 20 area residents met recently at the intersection of Jerusalem and Windy Hill Roads to discuss the hazards.

Shea told the conservation commission that a path should be cleared across the wild land across from Windy Hill Road so people can get to the pond without walking in the street.

The commission agreed to let the highway department cut about six feet of brush and tree limbs so a dirt path can be cleared.

Commission chairman Roseanne McMorris said she appeared before selectmen some time ago to tell them that the commission had already approved the project.

Commissioner Jeffrey Waal urged that a future town meeting be asked to ban fishing in the pond.

He explained that Hull is stocking the pond with eels and fish in attempt to control the periodic midge infestations which plague the area. Fish eat midge larvae.

The shallow pond was sprayed several weeks ago, a project the commission said went off without a hitch. No complaints were received by the office.

Wetlands agreement ready

Town counsel Richard Henderson showed up at the June 20 conservation commission to discuss the agreement between the commission and Donald Staszko, developer of the Stop & Shop, who was recently fined for various violations of the Wetlands Protection Act.

Originally the commission leveled a $7,500 fine against the controversial business leader, but the amount was reduced to $5,000 to avoid a lawsuit.

Henderson explained that Staszko must pay $2,500 when he signs the agreement and another $2,500 within 30 days of the signing date.

If he does not sign it, the commission could take him to court.

Liquor license transfer

After a brief discussion Monday (June 12) selectmen approved a transfer of the liquor license currently held by Cohasset Food Mart, Karen McKim, manager.

The new holders of the license will be SSFM, Inc., doing business as Cohasset Food Mart. Josephine Boles and Alice Myers will own the business, which Boles will manage.

In response to questions from the board, Boles said she has never been the subject of a complaint filed with the state Alcohol Beverage Control Commission.

She also stated that she agrees with Cohasset's tough policy on sale of alcohol to minors.

"Absolutely," she stated. "I take that very seriously. I have a teenage son."

She said her employees have been told, "If they (customers) don't look over 30, ask for an ID and if in doubt, refuse the sale."

Selectman Jane Goedecke told Boles that Cohasset is not keen on the lottery game Keno. "We're trying not to have it," Goedecke said.

Boles said she understood that many towns have reservations about the controversial game and said that she would accept the town's policy on the matter

Septic system is replaced

Called the castle because of its style and size, the house at 211 So. Main St. will soon be getting a rebuilt drinking water well and a new septic system.

Conservation commission members poured over the plans Tuesday night, which were presented by Maurice Beaudoin, of Bannister Consultants, Inc.

He said that the elegant six-bedroom house has been vacant for two years, but is being prepared for occupancy, probably by owner Fili Deligiannidis.

Cohasset's week

Manhole repair proceeds

Edward "Ted" Guild of the sewer commission, appeared before the conservation commission June 20, seeking permission to repair a manhole on the sewer easement at the rear of 55 Elm St.

Guild said they need to fix a leak.

The commission enthusiastically gave the project a speedy OK.

New owners at Red Lion

This week selectmen approved a transfer of the liquor and inn holder's licenses from 1704 Inn, Ltd. doing business as the Red Lion Inn, to the Red Lion Inn of Cohasset, Inc., doing business as the Red Lion Inn, Douglas A. Robinson, manager.

Robinson of Needham most recently worked as general manager of the Hampton Inn in Worcester. The new corporation president and owner of the stock is Arthur G. Smith of Weston.

Atty. John T. McLaughlin of Voke & McLaughlin of Chelsea, representing the new owner, said about $150,000 to $200,000 in improvements to the inn portion of the premises are planned.

McLaughlin said the all back taxes and water and sewer charges would be paid by the seller at the time of closing.

Committee members named

Selectmen appointed H. William Adams III, 178 N. Main Street, as the newest member of the Drug & Alcohol Committee this week. Cardiologist to study cure for heart arrhythmia

By Alice C. Coyle
Journal & Mariner Staff

South Shore Hospital Cardiologist and Cohasset resident Dr. Andrew Merliss is headed to Harvard for a six-month medical fellowship.

When he returns to the South Shore in December, he hopes to bring with him to a cure for cardiac arrhythmia, a frightening and potentially deadly disease.

This new procedure and possible cure for arrhythmia would use a technique called "radio frequency ablation" that would cut off abnormal electrical pathways in the heart and prevent abnormally fast heart rates, which are currently controlled through medication.

"This is one of the few areas in cardiology where a true cure can be affected," Merliss said.

According to Amy Drew, a heart information service assistant in the local office of the American Heart Association, more than 2 million Americans suffer from cardiac arrhythmia and thousands require hospitalization each year.

Merliss pointed out that arrhythmia occurs when the heart's electrical impulse travels down an abnormal pathway. Arrhythmia can speed normal heart rates of 70 beats per minute up to between 120 and 600 beats per minute, causing 'lightheadedness' or fainting, extreme anxiety, and even death.

At 600 beats per minute, the heart fibrillates, the individual can't sustain a blood pressure and is essentially dead, Merliss said, noting that most of his cases fall within in the 150-300 beats per minute range.

Merliss, who treats those patients with abnormally slow heart rates with pace makers, said now he plans to go after the fast ones.

"It's scary for people," said Merliss, who noted that the duration of an arrhythmia varies from seconds and minutes, to hours and days.

"Some people just hate it and tolerate it, others just pass out," he said.

The on-set can be very sudden, Merliss noted.

"One second you're fine and the next it feels like there's a machine gun going off in your chest," he said.

Currently, the treatment for the disease depends on the type of arrhythmia affecting a patient. For more potentially lethal arrhythmia's like Ventricular Tachy Cardia, Merliss said implantable defibrillators are used to shock the heart and interrupt irregular electrical impulses.

Cohasset resident, Dr. Andrew Merliss, is headed to Harvard to study a new procedure for curing cardiac arrhythmia.

But for many cases, Merliss prescribes drugs, which effectively set up a road block and force the electrical impulses to travel down the correct pathway, maintaining a normal heartbeat.

This new procedure will effectively do the same thing using what Merliss calls radio frequency ablation catheters. The catheters are inserted in the groin and neck and an array of electrodes are splayed through out the heart so that the timing and locations of the impulses can be mapped, he said. When the map is made, the catheter makes a small lesion, about the size of a pin head in the area and wipes out the abnormal pathway, Merliss said.

"The impulse hits a dead end and has to go along the normal path," he added.

The procedure takes three to eight hours and does not involve any open heart surgery, but Merliss said it is a very precise operation.

"It's like trying to interpret a foreign language. We're talking about finding a needle in a hay stack,"he said, adding "the timing is measured in milliseconds."

But if the procedure is successful, patients will no longer require medication, which Merliss said can be unreliable, can have negative side effects and can some times make an arrhythmia worse. Not everyone will be a good candidate for the procedure and each case will have to be carefully reviewed and screened, but it will offer a choice of treatment and possibly a cure to many in poor cardiac health, he said.

Merliss hopes to bring the treatment back to use in South Shore Hospital's new "Cath Lab" which is slated to open in July.

At Harvard, Merliss will study with two world renowned cardiologist and specialists in this field of electro-physiology; Dr. Peter Friedman and Dr. William Stevenson.

For, Merliss whose Weymouth practice sees more than 20,000 patients each year, being able to devote six months to this study is a unique opportunity.

"Most people aren't able to leave their practice. For me it's a great honor," said Merliss, who competed against many other prominent cardiologists for the fellowship.

Merliss' love for cardiology and enthusiasm for new treatments and cures makes him an excellent candidate for the fellowship.

"It all started with a stethoscope," said Merliss who loved the simplicity of this diagnostic tool. The EKG and more technologically advanced tools of the trade have made trickier diagnosis possible and have furthered cardiac care. And this new potential for a cure without implanting hardware is appealing, Merliss said.

Merliss' philanthropic endeavors were surely another plus on his resumé.

For the last 10 years, he has been vice president of Project Pacemakers International, a local group of doctors and nurses who travel "out-of-pocket" twice a year to underdeveloped and third world countries and provide pace makers to those who need them.

And according to Merliss the need is great especially in South America where numerous young people are suffer from a parasite that infects the heart. Known as Chagas disease, this parasite interrupts the the electrical impulses in the heart and causes heart block, Merliss said.

Vacation choices surveyed

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

Stung by heavy criticism of changes in the school calendar which eliminate one week of vacation, the school committee has decided to ask parents again what they think of the issue.

By the end of June, surveys will be mailed to parents, who will have one month to complete and return them.

If parents do not receive a survey, they will be able to fill it out in the superintendent of school's office. Each questionnaire will be coded to ensure that each household fills out only one.

The committee took the action at its recent meeting in the aftermath of an uproar from students and some parents about the loss of a vacation.

School committee chairman Ralph Kidder called the vacation discussion "an ongoing process."

However, the survey results will not affect the coming school year, the calendar for which was approved last fall.

School committee member Nancy Sandell said she would not vote in favor of a survey if the results would affect the upcoming school year, since planning around the calendar has been underway for some time.

In November the committee voted to replace the traditional one- week vacations in February and April with a one-week vacation in March.

Cardiologist to study cure at Harvard

Whether it's India or South America, Merliss said that whenever he brings a team abroad to offer medical care, he gains a deeper appreciation for the medical facilities he works in here at home.

Nothing is disposable in the operating rooms of third world countries, said Merliss who noted that gloves and gowns are used over and over until they fall apart, and temporary pacemakers, normally thrown away after one use might be shared among 100 different patients before being discarded.

Merliss brings as many supplies as he can carry on these trips and uses what he can in often less-than-sterile surroundings.

"We know our stuff is sterile. We're not sure their stuff is," he said, noting that unsterile conditions can lead to infections where the pacemaker is inserted.

"We work in an atmosphere of luxury here. They work in an atmosphere of necessity where nothing is disposable. They don't have that luxury."

Merliss regrets having to miss one of his annual good-will trips due to the fellowship, but hopes to bring this new cure with him the next time he goes abroad.

"This procedure will be a help to those who can't afford medication. In the third world, on-going medical therapy is not an option," he said. "With the proper team and set up we hope to be able to bring this to them."

Merliss said he also hopes the procedure will catch on here on the South Shore.

"There will be a transition factor. But as people become aware of how safe and successful it is, it will catch on," said Merliss, who pointed out that this is a low-risk procedure, with a short recovery period and only minimal scaring.

Another clear benefit to this procedure and others planned for the new Cath Lab at South Shore Hospital will be the elimination to an often stressful drive into the Boston hospitals.

"If we can offer services here in a high quality way the patient benefits and it is good for the community in general," Merliss said.

Selectmen seek five-town summit on fire and transit

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Cohasset selectmen will ask their counterparts in Hull, Norwell, Scituate, and Hingham to meet to discuss regional fire and emergency dispatch service and area mass transit.

The five towns proposed forming a Seaside Fire and Rescue District two years ago and spent about $30,000 to conduct a feasibility study but little has come of it, selectmen said Monday.

Now the towns have individually installed E-9-1-1 emergency dispatch service and, at least in Cohasset's case, have hired civilian dispatchers to man the system.

Selectmen said this week they hope regional dispatch isn't completely dead and they hope to resurrect talks on regional fire service.

They are also perplexed by the state's new proposal for a "busway" system along the Greenbush right of way.

Selectman Michael Sullivan asked just how long a trip to Boston would take on the system which would use buses that exit the Greenbush right-of-way in Braintree to join the Southeast Expressway.

Cohasset resident Robert Martin, who attends selectmen's meeting regularly, said mass transit is essential to the area but using an out-dated curving corridor is a bad idea.

He wondered if the T would be putting wheels on boats next.

"This area needs special attention, not just puling buses out of clouds," he said.

Cohasset selectmen are divided on support for restoration of the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad. Supporters for the train narrowly edged rail opponents in a recent town referendum on the issue.

State transportation Secretary James Kerasiotes said this week that a "busway" along the right-of-way will be studied as a possible alternative to restoration of the train.

Grant agreement inked

Selectmen signed an agreement with the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) this week for two paint lockers and a 10x16 foot recycling building valued at $4,620. The town will have to install a cement slab foundation for the building, Selectmen Chairman Merle S. Brown said.

The equipment to collect and recycle paint will be used at the town Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF).

Brown said plans are to encourage more citizens to recycle paint and the town will therefore have less to collect on Hazardous Waste Day when the town must pay to have the paint removed.

When you mention the word graduation, you will see the Moe family grin from ear to ear — Doug Moe graduated magna cum laude from Boston University College of Communication as a film major; he also won the Script Writers Award. Doug participated in the impromptu show "Spontaneous Combustion."

For his senior film project, guess who was his female lead? His fellow classmate and Cohassetite, Jen Plante! What fun that must have been for both of them! And lots of hard work too.

On the subject of being busy, think of Mr. and Mrs. John McDonald, who had twins born June 20! Their names are John Vincent and Hope Marie and from all accounts they are an awesome pair!

Their maternal grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. James Rosano of Hull St., Cohasset; paternal grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. James McDonald of Hingham.

Be sure to watch for John and Hope "strolling around town" this summer, it will be a real treat! Enjoy those babies, folks!

Coastal erosion

Massachusetts' coastline is constantly subjected to erosion by wind, water and man, yet measures designed to protect the coast — and federal funds for state government to carry out those measures — are being eroded too.

And we must speak up now.

The 104th session of Congress is seriously considering dismantling the Coastal Zone Management Act, first passed in 1972 to help states protect their rights at the same time they protect and promote important coastal industries, such as shipping, fishing, tourism and recreation.

According to the Massachusetts office of Coastal Zone Management, formed in 1978, the reauthorization of the act has been delayed while Congress discusses dismantling the Department of Commerce.

This department is in charge of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), which in turn administers the Coastal Zone Management Act. Congress is considering eliminating NOAA as well.

Two weeks ago when U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds testified before the Subcommittee on Fisheries, Wildlife and Oceans, he recalled defending appropriations for NOAA for a myriad of ocean, coastal and fisheries programs a year ago.

He said one of his colleagues was speaking against an appropriation for "bluefish tuna," which it turned out was a typographical error, yet the congressman was ignorant of the difference between blue fish and bluefin tuna.

"The point is that many attacking this and other NOAA programs knew so little about them they did not notice the error," he said, pointing out that he does not know the difference between a polar orbiting satellite and a geostationary satellite and would not propose to slash those NOAA programs.

Studds related the story because the latest round of zealous belt-tightening is undercutting the economic base of our coastal states by members of Congress who do not understand or appreciate how tourism, recreation or fishing contributes to our quality of life.

And NOAA provides science, management and technical assistance to these industries.

"When the House dissolved the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, those who live near or benefit from our coasts lost an important bipartisan forum," said Studds, who had been chairman of the committee when the Democrats were in the majority. "Let's not shoot ourselves in the other foot," he pleaded.

A healthy coastal environment and economy are important to a majority of Americans. This should be kept in mind, and Congress should not radically restructure NOAA.

Meanwhile, on another front, coastal advocates are worried that as Congress sets aside funds for all the mandatory spending, entitlements, national debt interest and for defense, little is left for the coast — or the beaches.

Flood control in the heartland has a louder constituency, it seems, than those who live along the shore, and as a result, the Office of Management and Budget wants to eliminate the beach restoration projects previously overseen by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

If we are to protect our shoreline, we need to let all our representatives in Congress — not just Studds — of our concerns. Sixty million dollars is a pittance, but distributed wisely, the economic benefits would be multiplied.

Support for 'Mr. D' voiced

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter in recognition of all the wonderful work Jack DeLorenzo has done for Cohasset High School. As commonly known, Mr. D. had applied for the once-available principal position. In my opinion, and I clearly do not stand alone, Mr. DeLorenzo would have been an ideal choice. I am not writing to criticize the new principal. In fact, I wish him all the luck in the world. I just wanted to voice my opinion of all the hard work and dedication Mr. D. has displayed.

For the past 10 years, Mr. DeLorenzo has lead the school both academically and in a disciplinary fashion. He has ben there when everyone needed him, from opening the gym for students to filling the substitute positions. He has gone above and beyond his vice-principal's duties.

I am a Cohasset High School graduate. In fact, I was part of his first, complete graduating class. One of the projects I worked with Mr. D on was Student Council. To be blunt, he is the Student Council. Don't get me wrong — the students do an extraordinary job, but when they get just a little lazy, as many of us do, Mr. D is always there to pick up the slack. When all of the little details are not worked out, or a chaperone can't make it, Mr. D is always there to cover.

Throughout the years, I have been graced with the opportunity to become personally involved with the DeLorenzo family. Mr. and Mrs. DeLorenzo have been a wonderful influence on my friends and myself. I can not remember how many times I went over to the DeLorenzos' just to talk. He became not only a leader, but a friend and mentor as well. I value his honesty, sense of humor and most of all, heart.

Mr. DeLorenzo has more dedication and heart than anyone I have ever met. I was hoping that he would get this position so that he could finally get the recognition that he deserves. I think that everyone knows how much work Jack D does, not only for the high school itself, but the students as well. The relationships that he has built are invaluable.

Mr. D — I would like to personally thank you for all of your hard work and let you know you have my utmost respect and recognition.

Cohasset's PALS officer is praised

(Ed's. Note: The following letter was sent to Police Chief Brian Noonan and a copy was in the selectmen's press packet.)

Dear Chief Noonan:

It is with sincere appreciation that I write this note. Due to the professionalism and enthusiasm of one of your officers, eighth grade students at CHS have been given a good start in avoiding potentially disastrous situations they may encounter.

Officer Lisa Matos has excellent interpersonal skills. Facing a classroom full of 13-year-olds can be an intimidating experience for a veteran teacher, yet Officer Matos handled the students as if she had presented this program a hundred times. Her examples made the possibility of violence become a reality for the vast majority of the group and the video presentations are still the source of much discussion.

While we all realize that the "Get Real About Violence" program is just the beginning of the enormous task of changing kid's attitudes towards violence, I personally believe that we succeeded in getting them to at least consider their actions. This will provide the foundation on which an effective prevention program can be built.

I am grateful to you and your department for providing us with an excellent resource such as Officer Matos. We look forward to her continued involvement in our efforts to make positive change in the community.

Bands should be allowed to play

To the Editor:

What's the story? Why is the South Shore community so unsupportive of the music scene? As an avid show promoter and musician myself, it really hurts when a hall, VFW, Sons of Italy, community center, ball room etc... won't allow an all ages show to be held. Apparently the owners of these halls feel that the concert might promote illegal activity such as drug use or drinking which, in turn, will turn into violence.

Undoubtedly, these are genuine concerns, but such problems very rarely arise at all ages shows. Hardly anybody comes to the shows totally drunk or high. Even if they did, they would just be laughed at and teased for being so stupid. Anyway, the hall owners need to do some research before they dismiss the idea of all ages shows at their establishments. Perhaps the South Shore community of hall rental people would rather see kids out dealing drugs and causing more crime. Or maybe they just don't care. I don't know. These shows do not promote drinking or whatever. They do, however, promote fun, positive energy, and extreme creativity. So, if you own a hall or something, let your guard down a bit. I mean, if you allow a meat raffle, why won't you allow bands to play? Push on.

Selectman Brown clears the air

(Editor's note: Selectmen Chairman Merle S. Brown made the following statement during the June 26 board meeting).

In the last two months there has been a lot of concern among ourselves and the public relative to the Board of Selectmen's meetings. As chairman, I would like to say a few words about this.

Everyone knows there has been, and continues to be, some distress regarding Cohasset Heights Landfill. Residents have expressed that this situation is a possible threat to the town's drinking water. Along with that serious concern is the wetlands problem, and closure assurance to protect the town in the future.

Over the years, the town has spent thousands of dollars trying to insure that all the protection needed is in place while also trying to avoid any further expansion that could effect our future water supply and/or wetlands.

This year the cost of this has really been brought to light as the town is looking at approximately $80,000 of legal fees to fight two current law suits that Cohasset Heights has brought against the town. As litigation continues, the cost could escalate.

I have stated that something needed to be done. My suggestion was that the Conservation Commission, the Board of Health and the Selectmen meet to discuss how best to deal with this and see how we could get the cost under control. As everyone is aware, things did not go smoothly. However, I believe the furor has passed and it is time to get back on focus. Many things were said that would be retracted if they could be. We need to move forward from here, on a positive note.

The board has quite a bit on its plate this year and we all have to work together in the town's best interest.

We have a new Harbor Master to appoint; the Harbor Dredging Project (very important and time-consuming); the DPW garage is finally coming to be (something many of us have been working on for many years), of of course we need to start looking at next year's budget now.

There are many other important projects that need to be done this year. I would like to meet with and see the communication improve between all boards, committees and departments this summer. We then can see what their concerns are and what they are looking at for expense next year.

I promise I will do all that I can to work together for the citizens and the interests of the town and hope the other selectmen will join with me in this objective.

— Merle S. Brown
Selectmen chairman

Health board adopts anti-tobacco rules

The war on teenage smoking heated up last week as the board of health unanimously adopted tough new regulations designed to make it harder for minors to obtain tobacco.

Susan Cronin and Dawn Silbor of the Tobacco Control Program of the South Shore Boards of Health presented the rules at the health board's May 23 meeting.

They also said that Cohasset is one of the easiest towns on the South Shore for teenagers to purchase tobacco products.

Other area towns have already accepted some regulations in an attempt to reduce tobacco sales to teenagers. Hingham, Kingston and Braintree have adopted most of the proposed rules, while Abington has a similar set of rules.

The regulations, which take affect Sept. 1 will:

- allow the board of health to require annual permits, which cost $20, for the sale of tobacco. The state Department of Revenue currently licenses tobacco sellers, but that list is not made public.
- establish a $100 fine for the first offense of selling tobacco to anyone under 18 years old, with a $200 fine for the second and $300 fine for the third offenses.
- prohibit free distribution of tobacco as a promotion.
- outlaw the sale of single cigarettes, which although against federal law, is common practice.
- ban vending machines.
- mandate that displays of tobacco products be located on, above or behind a counter, within ten feet of a clerk.
- require clerks selling tobacco to read the regulations and sign a statement indicating that they understand them.

The board of health may grant variances to these rules.

Greenbush alternative study

The operating committee of the Coastal Coalition met recently to review the press releases being issued about the busway proposal currently under review by staff members of the MBTA. The busway has been proposed as one alternative to the restoration of the Greenbush rail. Members of the Coalition from Cohasset, Scituate, Hingham and Weymouth applauded the Transportation Secretary Kerasiotes for directing the MBTA to explore alternatives other than the train.

However, the Committee has agreed that there isn't enough information available on which South Shore communities can base an opinion on the busway alternative, although members feel there are merits to aspects of the proposal.

The Committee has written to Secretary Kerasiotes asking that elements of the busway proposal be review, in addition to other intermodal proposals of merit that have long been supported by the Coalition, including a broad expansion of park and ride lots and express bus service to connect with the High Occupancy Vehicle lane; development of a regional Rt. 3 rail transportation center; and a number of ferry/bus proposals. These proposals include expansion of South Shore ferry terminal locations, interlinking of feeder bus services, direct South Shore ferry service to Logan Airport and ferry/bus connections from Rowes Wharf or a new transportation terminal in downtown Boston to destinations throughout the city.

Coalition co-chairmen Nancy Buckley and Randy Young have asked for a meeting with the MBTA and Secretary Kerasiotes to review the merits of the busway proposal and other alternatives.

Deer Hill School faculty is super

To the Editor:

On behalf of students, parents and the community, we extend our sincerest thanks to the faculty of the Deer Hill School for pitching in during this transitional year. The staff worked as a team, assisted the interim principals and helped move several issues to decision — all in addition to their regular classroom duties.

We congratulate them on a job well done.

Planners set to consider Rose Hill housing

As the Mariner went to press Wednesday night, the planning board had been scheduled to hold a public hearing on a proposed subdivision at the site of the former school bus parking lot on Chief Justice Cushing Highway, north of King St.

Donald Moncevicz, a civil engineer, submitted plans on the project, which call for the construction of 12 to 15 houses. The development is slated to extend behind Fair Oaks Lane.

Planning board okays Shaw's, praises plan...

In addition to Moore, Jean Simonds and William Good voted for the project.

Town counsel had ruled that members John O'Toole and Robert Sturdy could not vote because they had missed parts of the hearing on the proposal.

Moore took ten minutes to read aloud the nine page decision, which placed 20 relatively minor conditions on the plan.

The conditions included a request that Shaw's ask the state for permission to install a traffic light at new plaza entrance, just south of Beechwood St. and Route 3A.

If the state turns down that request, the supermarket is asked to pay for a police officer to direct traffic when necessary.

The planning board also wants Shaw's to ask the zoning board of appeal to modify a condition of the special permit in gave the supermarket, which forbids traffic leaving Shaw's from turning left, north, up Route 3A.

That condition would require north-bound cars to use the Beechwood St. exit at the plaza, something planners felt would be impossible to enforce and would have created unnecessary traffic on a residential street.

The other conditions: limit construction activity from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m.; regulate noise from the store's mechanical equipment to be stored on the roof; mandate maintenance of plants; require construction to be done in phases; order a traffic study on King St. and erect appropriate signage if necessary; spell out a number of drainage requirements; and limit truck deliveries to between the hours of 6:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. and 6:30 p.m. and 10 p.m.

Moore said that building inspector Robert Egan supports the conditions and that town counsel Richard Henderson wrote them.

"We've all worked hard to come up with these conditions," he stated.

The Shaw's executives were delighted that the long process was finally finished and said they accepted the conditions.

"What should we name it?" asked Shaw's attorney Martin Healy, to laughter, as he compared the arduous process to childbirth.

"We very much appreciate the hard work that went into this and the improvements which made it better," said Healy.

Moore also praised the work of the design review committee, which spent hours reviewing the exterior style and configuration of the plaza.

"When we suggested they (Shaw's) meet with design review, they ought to thank us, they're getting some first class consulting," Moore said.

Robert Martin of the Chamber of Commerce was at the meeting. He said, "I'm sure the board of directors will be delighted and I'm sure it will be a great addition."

Joseph Hamilton of Beechwood St., who is suing to amend the ZBA permit because it allows Shaw's to use some land in the residential zone, said he will proceed with his lawsuit.

He has no plans to sue the planning board and seemed resigned to the construction of the plaza.

Hamilton said he doesn't want to stop the project, only to "keep it off the residential land," which is near his house.

Moore also said that because the current septic system at the site has failed, a new system will be a huge improvement.

Built in the late 1950's, the shopping center which originally housed an A & P supermarket, has a troubled history in recent years.

Several years ago, its owners, Buildner's Holding Co., went bankrupt and the Old Stone Bank took the property over.

When that bank failed, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, FDIC, took control.

The board of health has repeatedly threatened to close down the shopping center because of the failed septic system, which must be pumped daily and is believed to be a potential threat to nearby wetlands.

The supermarket is expected to open by the fall of 1996.

Cushing Plaza is now assessed at $4.2 million, paying under $61,000 in property taxes.

The new plaza will be worth considerably more and will likely pay more in taxes.

Shaw's executives have estimated that the store would generate 225 full or part-time jobs. This does not include jobs at other stores in the plaza.

Headquartered in East Bridgewater, Shaw's currently about 90 stores in all New England states but Vermont. A new store is planned to open each month for the next 14 months.

A wholly-owned subsidiary of the British grocery giant, J. Sainsbury's, Shaw's reported $1.7 billion in sales for the 12 months ending Feb. 1994.

Daytripping

with Laura Ricketson Doherty

Halibut Point State Park

Many people have a secret place. One so special that its location is only divulged to a very small, select group. Mine has always been Halibut Point in Rockport.

So, you may ask, why write about it in a newspaper? For, although the Mariner readership may be select, it is, by no means, small. The main reason is that when I began going there as a child, "my place" was only known to local residents. But, within recent years, it has been taken over by the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Management and so now is opened to the public.

Altruistically, I suppose, it can be argued that what benefits the greater number is for the greatest good. In addition, to assuage my selfish side, Halibut Point remains as natural and free of overcrowding as when I first visited it, many years ago.

The area, itself, has had a long and varied history. Long before the first settlers arrived it was used by Pawtucket Indians as a summer home for fishing, hunting and farming. At about 1840, two local men began cutting the 450 million year old granite. For almost a century, it was the site of a working quarry.

The incredible expanse of rock and sea are the two almost overpowering views that greet both new and returning visitors, alike. I still am unable to say which affects me the most — the strength and solidity of the granite or the force of the ever-moving ocean. "The beauty of it all," is what attracts people to it, says Susan Fairbanks, director of community programs for the department.

The park encompasses more than 56 acres and although not a swimming area, is ideal for casual walking, hiking and picnicking. A number of special programs for both adults and children such as tours of the quarry are available throughout the year.

One new feature since becoming public is the self-guided trail maps which are easy to follow and offer a wealth of information. Many of the questions I have wondered about over the years are answered.

For instance, the water now visible in the quarry only accumulated when stone cutting stopped. Keeping the quarry dry was once a constant problem. At one time, workers removed the water by hand one bucket at a time or by harnessing a team of oxen to a winch. When the quarry industry collapsed and work stopped, the rain and springs quickly filled the pit with water.

Derricks were used to hoist the granite which weighed 168 pounds per cubic foot. During the busiest years, there were four in use - one of which towered 107 feet in the air.

I had often wondered about the rows of holes visible in the stone. I now know these were drilled in order to split the granite. If you see a round hole on a piece of stone, you are looking at a dog hole which was drilled into each end to hold giant hooks suspended from the derrick. Once the block of granite reached the surface, it was moved by oxen or train to a shed. There, men who specialized in cutting, shaped it into paving, curbing or building stone.

Throughout the park, giant iron staples are embedded in the granite surface. These are known as dead men and it took at least six of them to anchor the cables that held one derrick in place.

One attraction of the park which fascinates adults and children, alike, is the grout pile. If you climb to the top of it, you will be standing on a mountain of discarded granite pieces dumped over many years. To your right, is the Sandy Bay Breakwater which was constructed of granite from Halibut Point.

Ready for a rest after your tour? Lying out along the granite is a favorite pastime. If you're careful, you can sit on one of the rocks that juts out into the sea and let the waves lap and sooth your feet. Watch the gulls as they probe the ocean depths for their next meal or the yachts and fishing boats as they pass by.

Who knows, you may even see a pod of whales if the season is right. And, once my sister and I found a baby seal about which we spent the whole day worrying. Eventually, we were assured by park staff that it was being watched and if not reclaimed by its absent mother, a rescue was planned.

The park is open daily from dawn until dusk. There is a $2 charge for parking. Trail maps are available at the gatehouse. To get there, take Route 128 N to Gloucester; Route 127 N to Rockport. Allow about 1-1/2 hour driving time.

Beach stickers available

1994 resident beach parking stickers, also valid for Government Island and Parker Avenue, expire June 30 and the 1995 sticker should be purchased prior to July 1.

MORTGAGE PROTECTION

QUESTION: If you have homeowners insurance, will it pay off your mortgage in full if you die?

ANSWER: You are confusing homeowners insurance with mortgage protection insurance (a form of descending term life insurance). Homeowners insurance will insure your property against almost any conceivable damage or accident that can happen in, on, around and even away from your home. But it will not pay off your mortgage upon death.

Reducing term is about the lowest cost life insurance policy you can buy because the insurance protection decreases each year with the reduction of your mortgage.

Anniversary of arrival in America is benefit's focus

By James Loewenstein
Mariner correspondent

It was not the way you'd expect people to commemorate their arrival in America.

A Cohasset couple celebrated the 30th anniversary of their immigration to the United States by inviting the community to a special party to raise funds for a worthy cause. Those attending the June 25 function were asked to donate funds to help defray the cost of restoring the Minot Ledge Lighthouse Keepers Residence.

The benefit raised over $20,000, including a $10,000 matching grant from the Rotary Club of Cohasset, said Joe McElroy, president of the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation.

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation is a citizens group which has renovated the Cohasset Harbor residence. The funds will help pay off $75,000 in bank loans which members of the group had taken out to finance the renovation.

Government Island, where the residence is located, has been designated an historic district which is listed in the National Register of Historic Places.

The town owns the lighthouse keepers residence, but is leasing it to the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation for $1 per year.

"We feel so good about our life here and what this country has given us," including "lots of good friends," said Shirley Marten of Cohasset, explaining why she organized the party.

Shirley and Jim Marten, who emigrated from Surrey, England with their two children in 1965, say they are impressed with the openness of American society. The United States is "inclusive of immigrants and all races" whereas in England, "people erect barriers" such as joining exclusive clubs so that they can socialize only with people like themselves, Jim Marten said.

"We've never found that anybody has erected barriers for us," he added.

The benefit, held at the lighthouse keepers residence, was also intended to honor "the giving, sharing and understanding that has gone into the restoration," said Shirley Marten, a member of the board of overseers of the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation.

Different kinds of people from throughout the area worked together on the renovation and donated their services, including students from the South Shore Vocational Technical School, off-duty Cohasset firefighters, electricians and carpenters, and low-risk prisoners from a rehabilitation program run by the Norfolk County Sheriff's office, she said.

"Groups that don't normally meet were in the same setting, sharing the same goals," she said.

The Martens moved from England to Greenwich, Conn., in 1965, when Jim Marten became a general manager at Technicon Instruments, a manufacturer of automated blood analyzers. Four years later, the couple moved to Cohasset so that Jim Marten could start a company in Needham Heights called Damon Biosciences, which provided clinical blood testing.

The donations announced at the benefit also include $1,000 from the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, $900 from South Shore Playhouse Associates, and $500 from the Masonic Lodge of Cohasset, McElroy said.

The Cohasset Fire Department, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Rotary Club, and other community groups now use the lighthouse keepers residence as a place to hold meetings, he said. The downstairs floor, called Bancroft Hall, can also be rented for functions.

If no function is being held at the residence, the public is welcome to sit on the outside patio and enjoy the view of the harbor, McElroy said.

The Corporation would like to establish special visiting hours for the public on Saturday mornings, when coffee would be provided, he said. However, there are currently not enough volunteers to do that, he added.

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation plans to do additional landscaping at the site, and would also like to establish a fund to maintain the property. "We don't want it to fall into disrepair again," he said.

The Corporation hopes to finish paying off its bank loans within the next year, he said.

Donations to the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation may be mailed to P.O. Box 514, Cohasset, MA 02025.

The decision was based on a desire to create more longer periods of time for learning. School officials said that last year's calendar contained so many holidays, exam days and special days when students were released early so teachers could attend seminars, that of 36 weeks of school, only 13 contained five full days.

To further disrupt education, Kidder reported that many students are absent one or two days before and after each vacation.

To make their November decision, the school committee discussed the subject exhaustively. Teachers were surveyed and parents were asked their views via the Mariner and the school lunch menus. Parents favored the change by a two to one margin, while teachers opposed it 67 percent to 27 percent.

Students were united in their opposition to the change.

They claimed that since so few school districts in the state have a March vacation, Cohasset students would be isolated and unable to participate in events geared to the traditional February and April breaks.

Students also said that several Massachusetts towns have tried a March vacation, but returned to the traditional calendar after a couple of years.

Guided busway system greeted with skepticism

alternatives studied in the MBTA's Draft Environmental Impact Report.

Even so the busway will join the controversial rail option as the two transportation alternatives still under consideration for the Greenbush line.

The biggest common denominator for both plans is the right of way. It still exists, and the MBTA still controls it. Instead of commuter trains, the plan calls for running matriculated buses along a guided busway from Greenbush up to Braintree. At Union Street in Braintree the retractable wheels roll the buses out onto Route 3 where they will join rush-hour traffic via the high occupancy vehicle lane (HOV). At Freeport Street, where the HOV lane ends, the bus will have to merge into expressway traffic for the last leg of the journey into South Station.

According to Jodi D'Urso, a spokesperson from Kerasiotes office, the buses would have the smooth movement of the train along the busway. Grade crossings would become intersections with traffic signals throughout the line, with timed signals giving the bus the green light through the intersections. D'Urso said these intersections would improve traffic congestion.

While it would take 10 or more buses to carry as many commuters as a six-car train, Kerasiotes said the guided buses could carry upwards of 14,000 people through the corridor each hour. The buses would run every four minutes giving commuters who miss the bus a short time to wait for the next one.

According to traffic planners, the estimated travel time for the busway is approximately 45 minutes from Greenbush to Boston, just two minutes more than predicted for the train, D'Urso said. The fare would also be the same as planned for commuter rail, she added. While cleaner natural gas fuel is a possibility for the busway, a diesel fuel system is currently under consideration.

While at $126 million the cost of building the busway system is considerably less than commuter rail construction, D'Urso said operating costs for the busway will be higher. If the busway concept is chosen as a transportation alternative, it will be the first of its kind in the country. Similar systems in Australia and Germany are being studied closely and could serve in some degree as models for a Greenbush Busway.

While some may feel the whole guided bus idea has come out of left field, D'Urso said the concept has long been talked about internally. Environmental Secretary Trudy Coxe's Certificate asked the MBTA to continue to examine other tranportation alternatives, said D'Urso, who noted that at the beginning of the environmental review process the amount and extent of opposition to commuter rail was not known.

"This comes from the decision that something has to be done," D'Urso said.

And while the busway concept will be studied in earnest over the next two months, Kerasiotes has not ruled out the train.

In a release from the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction this week Kerasiotes said: "While commuter rail remains a viable transportation option for the Greenbush corridor, public concerns raised regarding the impact of the rail have led us to examine the merits of a guided busway system."

Over the next 60 days Kerasiotes said the two systems will be compared, but no environmental impact report will be required on the busway alternative.

"No-build is not a good option. Something needs to be done to reduce congestion along state and local roadways throughout the South Shore," said Kerasiotes who maintained that regardless of the Greenbush transportation decision, a transportation bond bill will be filed this year "making a major commitment to commuter boat services and facilities."

D'Urso said the busway appeals to state officials as a palatable alternative to rail, an alternative that may avoid long legal battles.

"It will help traffic congestion and answers some objections of the Coastal Coalition," she said.

But Coastal Coalition founders Nancy Buckley and Randy Young, while heartened by the state's examination of a rail alternatives, have many objections about the busway concept.

Buckley said she's unclear on how grade crossings will be eliminated and is skeptical about the T's estimates for commuting time.

"We're delighted their looking at alternatives," Buckley said, but said the boat and feeder bus system her group supports is still getting short shrift by the state.

"We're going to demand as taxpayers that they work at it more closely," she said, adding "we've worked too hard and know too much about this issue to settle for a half baked compromise."

Both Buckley and Young expressed regret that Kerasiotes did not rule the rail option out altogether and said without the train on the table, they felt the anti-rail Coastal Coalition and pro-rail group Back on Track could have joined forces and worked together on alternative multi-modal transportation for the South Shore.

On the busway concept, Young an abutter to the right of way in Hingham, said "we're really perplexed" and maintained that while he's not in favor of the proposal personally, he needs more information on it.

"I continue to look at balance," said Young, "balancing transportation needs and quality of life. We have this great harbor and we continue to stand behind boat and bus alternatives. That's why coastal is in our name."

William Grimes, founder of Back on Track also has concerns about the busway proposal and about the leadership or lack there of at both the local and state levels on this issue. "The blame has to go to the top," said Grimes, who asked "who's minding the store?

"Everybody, on all sides has found something wrong with it," said Grimes who called the "guided busway" a "bum steer." Grimes said he has questions about signalization, traffic and safety and said overall the system just doesn't make sense the way it's been described. Grimes has been particularly skeptical about the HOV lanes that are supposed to make the whole system work.

"Anyone who says HOV lanes make this possible, well I don't know what they're smoking," Grimes said.

Grimes suspects politics is playing a large role in these recent developments but said despite the confusion about this new alternative, his group will keep plugging the rail.

"We plan to hang in there. As long as no one says the rail is out we'll keep up with it," he said.

"We don't shut up easily."

Latest landfill filing to be focus of hearing focuses on air pollution, surface water contamination, wetlands damage and ground water contamination from the existing CHL, he said. And if the CSA is approved, the proposed CHL expansion could move to the site assignment stage.

CHL wants to expand the landfill and add a Materials Recycling Facility to house conveyors, glass crushers, shredders and bailing and storage area and to operate a Materials Processing Operation to separate recyclable demolition waste from the material being disposed of at the landfill.

CHL owner Paul Barry told selectmen last week that he is determined to expand the landfill. He recently offered a "global settlement" which tied resolving two lawsuits he has launched against the town in with issues surrounding the operation of the current landfill and the planned expansion.

Barry apparently hoped that mounting legal fees the town is paying to fight the lawsuits might propel town officials to come to a compromise.

But selectmen could not agree on how to proceed with discussions and opting to "let a judge decide," Barry withdrew his settlement offer last week.

Selectmen Peter Pratt alleged this week that Barry was being disingenuous with his peace offering.

"Although the operator allegedly comes to us with olive branch in hand, he chose to make no disclosure (about the CSA filing)," Pratt said.

Pratt said a certain level of disclosure was required and the town was unaware that the CSA process was "fully in train."

Meeting regular, Robert V. Davenport of Sohier Street defended Barry and said he was acting as a businessman.

During previous EIR filings, dozens of Cohasset officials and citizens sent comments to the secretary urging rejection of the report.

Lightkeeper house valued

Building Inspector Robert M. Egan estimates the value and replacement cost of the Lightkeeper's residence on Government Island at $362,800.

The town splits the cost of insurance with the Cohasset Lightkeeper's Corporation which leases the house from the town.

Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon explained that the town pays to insure the structure and CLC insures its operation. The 1,772 square-foot first floor has a community room including a commercial kitchen, restrooms, storage room and lobby. There are two one-bedroom apartments upstairs with a total area of 1,570 square feet.

Egan, who said he based his estimate on similar new construction because of the extensive renovations to the house, figured the downstairs at $125 per square foot and the upstairs at $90 per square foot.

"In the course of construction, foundations were repaired and new sills were installed," he said. "The building was completely redesigned and restructured. All new mechanical systems were installed. There are new windows and interior finish, as well as a new roof and siding."

Legal fees are topic

In a split vote this week, selectmen declined to take the legal firm Warner & Stackpole (W&S) up on its offer to reduce the town's $56,000 in outstanding bills through last March by about $2,300 if the town would pay all its back bills by June 30.

At the request of selectmen, W&S recently agreed to charge the town a lower rate. The Boston law firm represents Cohasset in matters relating to Cohasset Heights Landfill including defending the town in two lawsuits that CHL has launched against the town.

Selectman Peter Pratt said he could not approve payment of the bills until the town issues a Request for Proposal (RFP) for its environmental legal services. Pratt explained that he recently viewed the tape of special town meeting and is convinced that selectmen told voters approval of $80,000 in estimated additional legal and engineering fees for this fiscal year would be contingent on issuing an RFP. Selectman Martha Gjesteby agreed with Pratt and also voted no.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown and Selectman Michael H. Sullivan voted to pay the bills and take advantage of the savings. Selectman Jane Goedecke did not attend the meeting. The motion failed due to a tie vote.

Swim team mixes work and fun

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

There's no swimming five hours a day. The team roster isn't loaded with thoroughbreds who travel through the water with lightning speed, breathing through gills. But what the Cohasset Swim Team does have is a lively mixture of seasoned competitors and youngsters still trying to learn the different strokes in a recreational environment.

"It's a great opportunity for kids who may not have gotten a chance to swim elsewhere," said Miki Berg, a member of the Cohasset Swim Team Steering Committee. "It's not as strict. It's a great attitude.

"This does not have the pressure or level of competition that you'd get outside of this (South Shore Swim) league."

Outside of Little League baseball, the swim team is the team to be on during the summer. Tryouts last week resulted in a 100-swimmer roster of boys and girls in five different age groups. The team, coached by Kathy Vaughn and Dave Leahy has six regular-season meets, four intra-squad competitions and a South Shore Swim League championship meet at the end of the summer.

What makes the team particularly special is that every member is able to compete. Vaughn can only have a certain number of swimmers race in the meets against other squads, but the intra-squad meets give the others the opportunity to compete in as many different events as they want. The intra-squad meets are extremely low-key and offer the chance for the swimmers to work on certain strokes they may not otherwise try in a dual meet. The first is scheduled for Wednesday, July 12, five days after the season opener against the Scituate Yacht Club (July 7, 1 p.m.).

Berg says the more competitive and experienced swimmers offer a great deal of motivation to the younger kids, give them pointers and words of encouragement. The rookies are made to feel important by the better swimmers, crucial, Berg says, in keeping the recreational theme intact.

"There's a lot of talent on the team and that's nice because they're role models for the younger kids," Berg said. "It's a recreational team and it has sparked interest for kids to go on.

Berg called the team a "unique set-up."

"This team really encourages being part of a team," she said. "The older swimmers encourage the young ones. It enhances team spirit."

As for Berg, she is enjoying her first year on the steering committee. The committee, which includes Peter Berg, Cheryl Bugley, Susan Etkind, Joanne Lehr and Angie Walsh, is responsible for overseeing the hiring of coaches, setting policies, working on the administrative details of the squad, setting practice times and keeping a liaison with the swimmers' parents.

Despite all the work the committee does, it hasn't lost the overall philosophy of the team.

"We're just a group of people who want to provide an opportunity for a summer that encompasses swimming competition and fun," Berg said.

Not a bad way to spend the warmest months of the year.

'The Shark' swims with celebrities

By David McKee
Mariner staff

Monday was the only chance this summer for Massachusetts sports fans to get an up-close look at the best pros in golf as Mashpee's Willowbend Country Club hosted the fourth annual Children's Charity Golf Tournament.

Two-time British Open winner Greg Norman (better known as the Great White Shark) led the field which also included Gary Player (one of only four golfers in history to win all four majors), Rhode Island's Brad Faxon and former PGA champ and long ball hitter John Daly.

The day began with a clinic at 9 a.m. However, being a prompt reporter, I arrived with a co-worker a half hour before things began.

Our press passes enabled us to mingle among the early-arriving golfers and we utilized the opportunity to talk to and photograph some of the tourney participants.

Boston Bruin great Bobby Orr was there and in a fun mood. He joked around with Channel Four sports reporter Bob Lobel before the golfing began.

"That's Orr. O-R-R. Get it right," he said to a laughing Lobel.

Marshfield's Jeremy Roenick of the Chicago Blackhawks was also there chatting with former Bruin Craig Janney before the golfing began.

A couple months ago it was feared that Roenick's hockey career might be over after he hurt his knee after a rough check. However, he only had a small fracture and not a torn ACL and was able to make it back for the final round of the playoffs.

Roenick appeared happy to be on the links and not in a hospital bed.

Also making the trip to the Cape was Red Sox pitcher Roger Clemens and current Blue Jay Danny Darwin. You may remember Darwin for his $12 million dollar, four-year contract which produced about ten wins for the Red Sox. He now pitches for the Toronto Blue Jays. (He may be released by the time this article is printed, however.)

As for Clemens, he was making his second straight tourney and looked really pumped up in his golf shirt. I don't know if weight lifting will help a golf game but Clemens looked pretty mean as he stroked some practice drives. The ball screamed as it flew down the fairway.

Daly, who caused some controversy last year at Willowbend when he drove the ball over a crowd at a short par three and barely talked to his playing part-

Dave McKee

by Joe & Dave

There was really nothing special about them when the game began, just a bunch of good 'ole boys, and girls, trying work out the kinks for the first softball game of the season. For some it was their first time playing, despite the fact that Dave McKee (see photo at top) set up two practices.

So when the Mariner team took the field against the Memorial Press Group (MPG) Saturday at Marshfield High School, only a handful of players were ready for, what turned out to be, 10 innings competitive newspapers, both on and off the field.

By the end of the game, which the Mariner lost in an extra-inning squeaker, legends had been born.

Of course, I don't include myself in the legends group. I wound up with a crick in the back of my neck and a sunburn on the front from following my four pop-ups off my bat and into the second baseman's glove. I'd say I hit like a girl, but anyone who has seen some of the talent in girls softball in the '90s knows that would be an insult to girls softball. And that includes the ones hitting off cones. At least they know the feeling of reaching base safely.

Now on to some real players. Cartoonist Peter Menice proved to be the Mariner's best all-around player. At times it was difficult to tell exactly which position Pete was playing (shortstop) because he was all over the field making plays.

Kingston reporter Dave Wolcott, who was either on his way to Woodstock or Disney World following the game, judging by his Mickey Mouse tie dye shirt, was a big surprise. No one was more surprised than Dave himself.

"The Big Hurt" as he is now known around the newsroom, did himself proud at first base by coming up with a number of tough plays he made look routine.

Bob Olson pitched a strong game on the mound and deserved a better fate. Unlike the MPG pitcher (sour grapes time for Joe), who delivered more junk than O.J.'s "Dream Team," Bob put the ball over the plate without throwing anything terribly fancy. The MPG pitcher had an array of pitches that kept the Mariner batters off-balance all afternoon.

Dave McKee, he of his Chuck Taylor sneakers fame, flexed more than his muscles while racking up the hits. He flexed his left hand. Dave just managed to get his glove up to knock down a Patriot Missle disguised as a line drive. But it wasn't without a price. The ball caught him in the soft part of the glove, turning the lower part of his hand black and blue. This I know because I was there. But as the day wore on it became apparent it didn't matter if your were at the game or not because Dave showed, and explained his war story to everyone who would listen, and a few people who pretended to. I'm kidding of course. In Dave's defense, he was lucky to even get a glove on the rocket of a hit and probably saved himself a fortune in dental

Rangers pitted against Dodgers in LL finals

By Kevin Lewis
Special to the Mariner

The defending champs, the Rangers, will play the Dodgers this week for the Cohasset Little League championship. This marks the fourth time in the last five years the Dodgers will play for the championship. The Rangers are hoping to duplicate the Dodgers' undefeated 1993 season. The Rangers, under the coaching staff of Jay Caron, Bob Moody and Emmett O'Brien, enter the series undefeated and riding an incredible 33-game unbeaten streak. The Rangers are led by All-Stars and three-year starters Dougie O'Brien, Micky Palone, Chris Caron, Will Moody and Eric Shea. Other team members include Eric Libby, Greg O'Connor, Craig Davis, Jeremy Tedeschi, Brendan Goff, Matt O'Grodnick and Evan Pastone. This is an extremely well-coached underdog.

The Dodgers' coaching staff includes Don Roine, Steve Webber and Kevin Lewis. The team is led by senior members Sean Chase and Mark Verrochi, members of the Dodgers' last championship team. The team is dominated by 11 year olds. They are Kyle Webber, Brendan Byrne, Jeff Scribner, William Prendergast, Andrew Walsh, Liam and Yari Martin. Curt Kahn, John Dwyer and two-year starter Brian Lewis are 10-year old members.

This promises to be an exciting series between the undefeated Rangers and the Dodgers, who have won 10 out of 12 to reach the championship series.

Nothnagle headed to World Games

Cohasset athlete Jay Nothnagle is packing his bag this week for a once in a lifetime trip to the World Special Olympics Summer Games. The event opens July 1 in New Haven, Ct. where 7,000 athletes from 140 countries will gather at the Yale Bowl for what will be the largest sports event in the world in 1995. Massachusetts is sending 170 athletes, coaches and delegates in 16 sports.

Jay is representing Massachusetts as one of four powerlifters. Jay, who is 21 years old, qualified for the team by winning gold medals at the state competition a year ago and was selected as an outstanding lifter willing to complete the rigorous training schedule the World Games demand. Jay, who competes in deadlift and benchpress in the 132 pound weight class, has been training three times per week for the past year at Cambridge Rindge and Latin High School with Cambridge Special Olympics. He has competed in meets in Rhode Island, Wrentham and Hanover. His most recent competition was at the 25th Anniversary Massachusetts Special Olympics Summer Games at UMass-Boston last weekend. He won three gold medals. At the World Games, Jay plans to better his personal records of 170 pounds in the benchpress and 275 pounds in the deadlift. Medals are given for individual lifts and total combination of lifts.

Jay is extremely excited about the World Games. He will be in Connecticut for 10 days. Besides the daily competitions, a multitude of international events are scheduled for the athletes, families and spectators. TV coverage of the games will be on ESPN, Wide World of Sports July 8 and 15, and NBC for two hours, tentatively scheduled for July 5 at 8 p.m.

Diamond Girls go down fighting in second round

Although two of their stellar performers, Kendra Topalian and Jessica Niessink, missed the game because of family commitments, the Diamond Girls nearly engineered the upset of the Cohasset girls' softball season last Thursday night.

The Diamond Girls had the crowd buzzing as they went head to head against the first-place powerhouse club Charlie's Angels in the second round of the season-ending playoffs.

K. C. Camacho and Sarah Motley pitched and fielded with a certain sleight of hand that baffled opponents and fans alike. K. C. ended a third inning Angel rally with a well-executed double play and Motley snuffed Angel hopes in the fourth when she snared a blistering line drive.

Sarah Pease, Clara Sceery, Lindsey Gardner and Julia Lovallo played to perfection in the field. With the score tied 3-3, it appeared the Angels would break the game wide open when they scored three quick runs and threatened more with no outs. In the blink of an eye the inning was over without further damage to the Diamonds as Lovallo snagged a hard-hit ground ball and tossed out the lead runner. Pease then handled two straight force outs at third base. Gardner and Sceery easily moved from infield to outfield and back again, adhering closely to the Diamond defensive strategy.

Beth Smoot played outstanding at first base and was a key player in the Diamond offense. She began a two-out rally in the first inning with a solid hit to center field. Motley and Sceery then drew walks to load the bases. Maggie O'Connor smashed a double that cleared the bases.

Elizabeth DeJulio showed her versatility once again by moving to the outfield to defend against the power hitting of the Angels, before returning to catcher where she played with pluck and tenacity.

Lydia Guild had two hits in three at bats. Leighanne Walsh and Emma Gardner both had perfect nights at home plate when both reached base two times in two at bats each. Walsh and Gardner scored the Diamond's fourth and fifth runs on Smoot's base hit in the fifth to bring the Diamond Girls to within one run of the Angels.

With two outs in the last inning and the Diamond Girls still losing 6-5, O'Connor stood on first base as Gardner came to the plate. Gardner singled hard to short center field and the question became would O'Connor beat the force out at second. O'Connor, running at full speed, just beat the throw and then stunned her own team, the Angels, and the fans when she just kept running. The throw to third just missed her as did the throw home. Her daring base running sent the game to the bottom of the last inning with the score tied 6-6 and the first-place Angels trying to stave off elimination.

The Angels kept their poise, demonstrated their great abilities, and smashed home the winning run to win the game 7-6.

Congratulations to both teams for a fun season.

Girls' softball to field traveling team

This summer Cohasset girls' softball (through Little League) will field a traveling team, playing a 10-game schedule against other area towns.

Girls just finishing the fifth and sixth grade, who played in the in-town spring softball league, and who will not be age 13 before August 1, are eligible. The team will be limited to 14 players. Those interested in trying out must submit an application form to John Smoot, 175 Hull St., Cohasset, by July 1.

Information about tryouts will be forwarded after the application deadline. If you have any questions or would like further information, call John Smoot at 383-1195.

Lacrosse clinic for grades 4, 5, 6

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations at their office, at 383-6791, for an evening lacrosse skill development program, designed for youngsters who will enter grades 4, 5 and 6 in September.

Lacrosse clinics are designed to teach youngsters fundamental skills and concepts of lacrosse and will meet Tuesday evenings, 6:30 p.m. to 8 p.m., at the Deer Hill School, beginning Tuesday evening, July 11 through August 15.

This specialized developmental program will be instructed by local college and high school lacrosse players and the fee will be $26 per person for the six sessions. Participants will need a helmet and lacrosse stick to enroll. Other equipment will be unnecessary as no contact scrimmages will be held.

Photographer Alan Chapman traded his camera for a glove and didn't allow a ball past him as the starting first baseman. Known mainly for his prowess behind a camera and on the tennis courts, Alan showed the world, or at least our tiny corner of it, that, yes, he knows where the foul line is.

It may not sound like a big deal, but "foul" seemed to be the battle cry of several Mariner fans in the obstructed view seats along the third-base line. Unfortunately their "knowledge" of the game was overshadowed by the embarrassing comments many blurted out in the heat of competition. Of course, they were in perfect position to judge whether or not the balls were dropping in fair or foul territory along first base. But that's just their competitive nature and desire to see the Mariner squad wind up with the "W".

Left fielder Rob Rogers, the Marshfield reporter, showed his recent trip to the Caribbean did nothing to slow his reflexes as he ripped a pair of hits. And the other left fielder, intern Doug Heald came up with a number of run-saving catches that would definitely be featured on "Sports Spotlight" had there been a video camera running. Tracey Troup, our new intern (wink, wink) had a pair of hits and showed off the talent that made her a three-time Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic.

Second baseman James Pryor, like Wolcott, has a new nickname. He's not from St. Louis and won't be elected to the baseball hall of fame, but the Mariner has its own "Wizard of Oz," thanks to a tremendous fielding play. James got a great jump on a hard-hit grounder and still had to make a diving play. He trapped the ball and fired to Chapman to get the runner at first.

As for my pathetic self, I came up with several conclusions. I don't want to bat against Abington's Jill LeClerc or Hanover's Ryan Baker. The Indians' Christian Frattasio can have the catching position. And if the game was played in Pawtucket, I would have been tarred and feathered. Remember, I'm a Jose too.

But what can you do. The game ended, both team's shook hands, and one team left the field understanding the thrill of victory while the other experienced the agony of defeat. And in Dave's case, the agony of a bruised hand.

—Joe Reardon

A new road race is ready to be unveiled on the South Shore come August 26, in Hanover and it couldn't be for a better cause. The Caljouw Cross Country and Walk will be held at Hanover High School beginning at 9 a.m.

The race is in memory of Mark Caljouw, a popular high school player, who died in November of '93. Proceeds from the 5K (3.1 miles) event will benefit the Mark Caljouw Scholarship Fund.

The double-loop course will be held on trails, paths and fields which abut the high school. The divisions, which will be run 20-30 minutes apart, include male and female race in the following age groups: 40 and over, 19-39, 18 and under. The walk will include all ages.

Teams, groups or families can enter as well. A team will consist of 3-5 individuals. Scoring is by place, not by time. The first three finishers count in the overall scoring.

For more information on the race, call Gary Edwards at (617) 826-7219.

'The Shark' swims with celebrities at charity tourney

ners, was a perfect gentleman this time around as he signed autographs and even posed for some pictures before the clinic.

The new Daly still hits the ball a mile but appears to have matured as a person. Each time he launched a drive the crowd oohed and aahed.

But Norman, who has won more than $800,000 this month alone with two tourney wins and a second in the U.S. Open, was the star attraction of the day.

The blond Australian was completely decked out in Reebok Shark wear (Willowbend is owned by Reebok's Paul Fireman) and was mobbed by fans everywhere he went.

But thanks to the old press passes, I was able to get close and get a snap-shot with the Great White Shark arm-in-arm.

It was a great sports thrill for me. As for the Shark, he probably takes more than a thousand of those pictures each year and he didn't appear too thrilled.

At the clinic, the Shark had a wireless mike on and chatted it up with everyone from Player and Faxon to Orr and Thomas as they ripped various golf shots. Faxon made fun of Norman and Player's accents.

"No one will understand if you guys do all the talking," he said of Shark and the South African Player.

Norman said that a key to his recent strong play was a book about Zen and the Art of Self-Defense, or something like that.

The Shark said his studies of Zen have helped him focus and eliminate distractions on the golf course.

Being one of the worst hacks around, I might be more interested in books that have something to do with the sport of golf, but the Shark made $800,000 last month while I couldn't hit anything straight at the driving range.

Confidence is everything and if a book about Zen is helping Norman win 800,000 balloons, maybe its worth reading.

The clinic soon ended and the charity tourney began.

Norman casually walked up to the first tee with his amateur partners and proceeded to smoke a drive 280 yards down the middle of the par-five fairway.

It was weird standing in the fairway (once again, thanks to the press passes) as Norman prepared for his second shot.

The crowd kept deathly quiet as Norman drew back his fairway wood. His club moved so fast in his swing that I couldn't pick up the flight of the ball.

No need to fear though, as it landed just on the rough above the hole some 270 yards away and Norman was left with a chip for an eagle.

He missed his chip and then his birdie putt and had to take a par. I guess Zen and the Art of the Three-Foot Putt is next on his reading table.

Norman and his group headed to the second hole and I drifted away to catch a few of the other golfers.

As in any pro-am, the pro's make the game look so easy with their smooth swings and high-flying shots. The amateurs are only out there trying not to embarrass themselves or kill anyone.

And while I saw some players get embarrassed by some of their shots, no one died as far as I could tell.

One more thing, don't believe anyone who tells you New England isn't a golf area.

The crowds were bursting through the ropes and Norman had to sign autographs as he walked between holes. If he stopped, he wouldn't have moved for six hours.

But aside from a U.S. Open at The Country Club in Brookline every 30 years or so, there isn't much big time golf played in New England and that's a shame.

Maybe one day, the PGA tour will make a stop in Southern New England.

One day of standout golf per year just isn't enough. At least not for me.

Walking beat arrests

Police on a walking beat in Cohasset Village made two arrests in the past week.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said a case of beer was visible in the back seat of a vehicle and resulted in the arrest of two minors at about 10 p.m. Friday (June 23). Police charged Jerry Bonenfant, 19, of Tilton, New Hampshire and Timothy L. Conroy, 19, of 379 Atlantic Ave., Cohasset with Minors in Possession of Alcohol. Conroy was also charged with possession of Class D (marijuana), police said.

Sgt. Jackson said throughout the summer police will continue walking beats in the Village area and at Sandy Beach.

Harbor arrest made

While on harbor patrol Sunday (June 25) police arrested John Maurer, 36, of 130 Doane Street and charged him with OUI of a boat (4th or subsequent offense), operating a boat negligently, assault & battery on a police officer, threats and outstanding warrants.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said Ptl. Richard Yocum made the arrest when he observed the 15-foot outboard motor boat, which Maurer was operating, being driven erratically in Cohasset Harbor.

Maurer was arraigned in Quincy District Court Monday (June 26). He was held on $5,000 cash bail and is being held in the Dedham House of Correction, Jackson said Wednesday.

Jackson said police also issued two motor boat citations while patrolling the harbor.

When necessary, police will continue to help patrol the harbor until selectmen hire a new harbormaster to replace Shawn Kelly who recently resigned.

Hull sewer hook up could solve Straits Pond septic problem

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner Staff

Studies continue to move forward on sewer solutions for Cohasset, including a plan to connect homes within 200 feet of Straits Pond to Hull's waste water treatment facility.

Cohasset's interest in an interconnection with Hull is part of what could become a tri-town sewer project with Cohasset, Hingham and Hull.

Tutela Engineering Associates, the company hired to study the town's sewer options, sent a letter to Hull last month outlining three interconnection options, including the Straits Pond sewer line and inquired about the Hull plant's capacity, said Sewer Commission Chairman Edward "Ted" Guild. Guild is still awaiting detailed information on that capacity and whether other areas in addition to Straits Pond can share in the Hull solution.

"We have to find out Hull's capacity. Cohasset can't plan without knowing this," Guild said.

A court "agreement for judgment" by the state adds urgency to the need for Cohasset to find a solution to its sewer problems. Under this agreement an approved sewer system for about 1/3 of the town — about 650 homes — must be operational by April 1, 1999.

Three alternatives are currently under consider-

Planners ponder 13-home project off Route 3A

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

After more than an hour of discussion last week, the planning board agreed to continue a hearing on the fancy Rose Hill subdivision proposed for 94 King St., (Route 3A) until Wednesday, July 12.

Owners of the 18.5-acre parcel, Charles and Maria Pape, plan to build 13 single-family houses, each with three or four bedrooms and an attached, two-car garage. They hope to start construction in March.

Much of the discussion concentrated on drainage and access to nearby James Brook, Sanctuary Pond, and conservation land owned by the town and the Trustees of Reservations.

Plans call for strips of land to be left natural which would connect the wild parcels and provide public access. Engineer Donald Moncevicz explained that the 13 house lots would comprise 64 percent of the site, the new road to be built would take up another seven percent, leaving 29 percent of the land as open space.

He and Pape also stressed that as many trees would be left on the house lots as possible.

In general, planners appeared to like what they heard.

Recycling center is dedicated

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

One of "God's gifted children" was warmly remembered Monday (July 2) during a special ceremony at the Cohasset Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF).

Joseph "Skinny" Laugelle, who runs the RTF, choked back tears as he dedicated the new recycling building in Timothy Myers' honor.

"Timmy was a special needs child one of 'God's gifted children.

"He worked here five years volunteering his time. He was a dedicated worked, a good worker," Laugelle said.

Myers, 25, a 1990 graduate of Cohasset High School, died on Easter Sunday (April 16) of a brain tumor.

Laugelle recalled how several years ago Myers' parents asked if their son could help out at the RTF.

> 'I had Tim separate bottles and it worked out good, so they (his parents) asked if he could come back and that started a friendship that will never end, believe me.'
> — Joseph "Skinny" Laugelle

"I had Tim separate bottles and it worked out good, so they (the Myerses) asked if he could come back and that started a friendship that will never end, believe me," he said.

Laugelle said Myers was neat, well-mannered and on time.

Cohasset's week

Cohasset 4th of July fire

Cohasset firefighters are investigating a suspicious fire that damaged a garage on Hull Street late Tuesday night.

Chief Roger Lincoln said the owners of the property, Louis and Barbara Esposito, at 167 Hull Street were not home at the time.

The fire was extinguished in less than 10 minutes.

There were no injuries reported, and no estimate of damage at this time, he added.

Three engines from Cohasset and one from Hingham responded to the call, to find flames shooting 25 to 30 feet into the air on the side of the one-car wood-frame garage.

This was "an automatic mutual aid call," Lincoln said since the address is on the town-line between the two communities.

Apparatus from Hull and Scituate covered the Cohasset fire headquarters, Lincoln added.

Recycle your junk mail

The recycling committee and the Board of Health have made it possible for the following items to be recycled:

Envelopes and contents of junk mail, note paper, copy, drawing paper and boxboard such as shoe boxes and cereal boxes with the liners removed. Hardbound books and notebooks without metal binders can also be recycled.

These materials should be placed in the labeled blue container at the Cohasset transfer station.

Still not acceptable for recycling are: plastic or plastic-coated paper, carbon paper, tissue, napkins and paper towels, paper cups or paper plates.

The town of Cohasset urges all residents to take part in the recycling program.

Water restrictions in effect

All Cohasset water department customers are asked to follow an odd/even watering schedule. Those living in even-numbered houses are able to water on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. Residents in odd-numbered houses may water on Wednesday, Friday and Sunday. There will be no watering on Mondays.

Summer water restrictions still remain in effect because all distribution improvements have not been completed, water department officials said.

Mosquitoes back in force

The mosquitoes have arrived. Spring rains have made conditions ideal for mosquito breeding. Residents can take action now which will help reduce these annoying pests from hatching and help reduce the need for chemical pesticide spraying of the adult population.

Mosquitoes breed in still water and killing the larvae is the safest and most effective method of controlling the adult population. Homeowners should search for and eliminate areas of standing water on their property. These areas could be wheelbarrows, wading pools, old tires or clogged gutters. If you remove the water, mosquitoes cannot breed and that means fewer mosquitoes hatch in your yard and your neighborhood. If you have large areas of standing water on your property, try to restore movement and if this is not possible treat with Mosquitos Dunks available from local hardware stores and garden centers. One Dunk will treat 100 square feet of water for a period of 30 days. These dunks will kill the mosquito larvae without impacting pets, wildlife or the surrounding environment, acccording to the mosquito control committee.

If you need further advice or assistance regarding mosquito control, please call the Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee at the Board of Health, 383-9900 ext. 120. Additional information about mosquito control and the safe use of insect repellents is available in the lobby of Town Hall directly across from the Recrea[illegible] Department.

Recycling made simple

Through a donation made by North Shore Recycled Fibers/The Newark Group, residents of Cohasset have recycling information at their fingertips 24 hours a day by dialing a recycling hotline (1-800-800-6881 or (617) RECYCLE.

A grant from NSRF, one of the state's leading recycling companies and a key provider of recycling services to the town, ensures that Cohasset's recycling message will remain part of a non-profit, statewide recycling hotline dubbed "E-Call." When Cohasset's zipcode is entered following a call to the hotline, a voicemail message will be played, detailing Cohasset's latest recycling news.

Recycling center dedicated to volunteer...

"Then God came down and took my good friend," he said.

David Hassan, owner of Hassan Sign, donated the sign for the Recycling Center, Laugelle said. The building was paid for through an appropriation at town meeting and houses the baler. About a dozen town officials, friends and members of Myers' family gathered at the RTF for the ceremony.

Recycling Committee Chairman Arthur Lehr fondly recalled how Myers reminded everyone to "take the cap off" their jugs and bottles.

"I've worked with young people for over 60 years and occasionally a young man comes along like Tim that really touches your heart," Lehr said.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said Myers "always had a smile" no matter what the weather was like.

"He was very friendly to everyone. Tim was a wonderful person, we'll all miss him," Brown said.

Dorothy Myers, Tim's mother, said her son loved working at the RTF.

"No matter if we had to go to a wedding he'd say 'Skinny needs my help,' "she recalled. "He loved coming here."

Planners ponder 13-home project off Route 3A

"I think it's going to be great," said planning board member William Good. "I think you are going to do a great job."

Planning board chairman Alfred Moore, who lives on Fair Oaks Lane, is an abutter to the site and will therefore not vote on the plans. He did however, sit in on the hearing and offer comments.

Planning board member Robert Sturdy was in Italy and missed the hearing, leaving Jean Simonds, John O'Toole and Good to make the final determination of the issue.

Town counsel Richard Henderson recently ruled that board members who miss a session of a public hearing cannot vote on that issue, because they are acting in a quasi-judicial capacity.

Moncevicz told the board that the house facing Rte. 3A which the Pape family now lives in, will be retained and will comprise one of the 13 lots.

A cement block building near Rte. 3A will be demolished, the engineer said.

In discussing services for the new road, Moncevicz said that all utility wires will be placed underground. A 12-inch water main on the easterly side of King St. will provide water, while private or shared septic systems will handle sanitation.

Moore questioned the 400-feet of land located in the highway business zone along Rte. 3A.

In response to Moore's questions, Pape said he would consider a town meeting request to change the zoning if necessary and if the move wouldn't slow down the project.

The planning board plans to research the zoning issue and discuss it further at the July meeting.

Drainage plans include a catch basin near Rte. 3A. Moncevicz explained that water runs off the state highway onto the property. However, it will channelled into the wetlands, eventually to end up in Sanctuary Pond.

Traffic also remained a concern to planners, who pointed out that it will be difficult for vehicles exiting the new subdivision to turn left, south, onto Rte. 3A at morning rush hour.

"That is a very tricky, tricky section of 3A," Good said.

Moncevicz will talk with the state highway department about that issue.

Hull sewer hook up could solve Straits Pond septic problem

According to Tutela Engineer Daniel Coughlin, the first would involve installing sewer lines and connecting them to the Hull treatment facility at an estimated cost of more than $5 million. Upgrading its own treatment plant and maintaining the existing discharge into James Brook by improving the quality of discharge is another option for Cohasset at about half the cost of the Hull connection. Finally, discharging into Cohasset Cove with even more stringent treatment improvements could be done at a cost of $3.1 million.

Guild said it is more economically justifiable and affordable to sewer the most heavily populated areas of town and noted that there is a possibility that the project could be 75 percent state funded.

While a sewer system is slated for the densely populated center of town, Guild said the long troubled Straits Pond area must also be addressed. Guild is leaning toward one of the two Cohasset sewer solutions for the center of town but said that the Hull hook up is the best alternative for Straits Pond residents.

"We have to do something for Straits Pond," said Guild, who noted that it is an Area of Critical Environmental Concern. Nitrates and phosphates produced by septic systems adjacent to the pond encourage the growth of weeds that can choke off the pond, Guild said.

Guild described the pond as a huge, natural evaporating pan, one mile long and 1/2 mile wide with very little water flowing in and out. Guild said estimated flows from the houses in that area — which is profoundly affected by new stringent Title V regulations — would be about 20,000 gallons per day, which is the capacity Hull officials said is available to Cohasset.

"We'd like to do more houses but we can't, unless Hull gives us the capacity," Guild said.

The other capacity concern involves Hingham's participation in the Hull hook up project.

Still licking their wounds from the failure of a joint venture to build a septage disposal facility with Hull behind the Hingham District Courthouse on George Washington Boulevard, Hingham Sewer Commissioners are cautiously entering negotiations for this venture. But like Guild, Hingham Sewer Commissioner John Brandt is eager to find a sewer solution for his town's trouble spot, Weir River Watershed Area near the Bonnie Brier neighborhood.

In Hingham, plans are being studied to connect 160 homes in the Weir River Watershed Area to Hull's plant bringing a solution to a long-time problem of failing septic systems leaching into the Weir River.

Guild hopes the three towns can work together to make the interconnection with the Hull facility work.

In the meantime, engineers continue to iron out the details of the other sewer alternatives and Guild said he expects to have an announcement on the project within a month. Cohasset will have to report to the state by next spring, he said.

Holocaust survivor speaks to students

By Selma Ingber
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset-PSO Diversity Committee recently sponsored a talk by Esther Gens of "One Generation After."

Mrs. Gens, a Jewish Holocaust survivor, addressed the junior class of Cohasset High School along with a number of faculty and community members, sharing her experiences during the Second World War. She introduced herself, simply saying, "History you can get from books. I'm just here to tell my story."

In a soft-spoken yet compelling fashion, Mrs. Gens told the students about her experiences as a child in Nazi-occupied Poland. She was seven years old when the Nazis invaded her homeland. Her parents brought her and her two brothers to a neighboring farm, where they hoped their children would be safe. The farmer disclosed the children's whereabouts to the Nazis. Mrs. Gens witnessed her brothers' death at the hands of the same soldier who spared her life. She then returned to the farmer who betrayed her family, and remained with him, disguised as a Christian farmhand, for the duration of the war.

Mrs. Gens not only tells her story but asks students to ponder thought-provoking questions, such as how they might act in similar circumstances, and can evil and good exist in the same person.

Her talk was especially moving because it was so personal. Despite her gentle manner, it was apparent that she spoke at great personal cost. The events she described took place 50 years ago, but the pain connected to these memories remains raw and very much in the present.

Mrs. Gens told the students that these experiences were so horrifying that she was unable to speak about them for 40 years. Recently, she became involved with "One Generation After," and began speaking about her experiences, feeling that she could best honor the memory of those lost during the war by bearing witness to the atrocities of that time. She charges the students similarly, stating, "I've told you my story — now you must bear witness."

The questions and comments raised by the students reflected a compassionate and thoughtful group of young people, who were clearly moved by Mrs. Gens' presentation. The following are excerpts from a number of letters the students sent to Mrs. Gens following

Art Center head lauded for her many accomplishments

By Laura Ricketson Doherty
Mariner correspondent

When people talk about Lanci Valentine, you may wonder if you're hearing about several different people.

A reason for this is that Valentine is one of those rare individuals who not only successfully accomplishes several different things at the same time, but also appears to thoroughly enjoy each and every one of them.

Ask anyone at the South Shore Art Center, of which Valentine has been director for the past seven years, and from which she recently resigned to spend more time with her family.

At a recent reception to honor her and her work more than one guest said that Valentine was the heart and soul of the center.

'Our society will be remembered by its arts, not by accounting methods.'
— Lanci Valentine

Gallery artist Mandy Avery, who met Valentine, a Duxbury resident, in 1988, noted her care and concern for everyone.

"We both ran the festival that year, even though neither one of us had done anything like that before. We were able to pull the whole thing together and discovered that there were a lot of people who will help if you only ask," Avery recalled.

Claffy Williams, another gallery artist, served on the committee that nominated Valentine to the directorship. She describes her as very creative, "an appreciator who knows everything."

Virginia (Ginny) M. Allen, gallery artist and faculty member of the Massachusetts College of Art, agrees.

"She's one of the best things that's happened to the center," she says warmly, underlining her professional expertise, her astute eye in choosing exhibitions and her kindness and compassion.

Resigning South Shore Art Center director Lanci Valentine, shown here, plans to stay active as a volunteer at the art center.

"She knows how to talk with and about artists," Allen adds.

In his tribute to Valentine, Tom Hamilton, president of the center, listed her many achievements, not the least of which is the center's current strong financial standing.

Unlike many other nonprofit organizations, he noted, the center is now debt-free, having paid off its mortgage last year. This represents a dramatic change from seven years ago when Valentine became director. At that time, the center, Hamilton recalled, was b[illegible], with a huge mortgage and no money in the ban[illegible].

There has also been a dramatic increase in membership from as far away as Plymouth and Newburyport. Members, Hamilton explained, appreciate the combination of classrooms with galleries, children and adult classes.

"Lanci," he notes, "Is unusual. She is a fabulous generalist at a time when most people specialize."

Listing some of her many responsibilities — including managing finances, artists, the board of directors, patrons, and members — he concludes, "She can do it all."

Valentine, who had worked previously at the Duxbury Art Complex, feels the center was a great place to work. It is equally obvious that a lot of time and effort went into her work and that she had fun doing it.

"I love it here," she says in her enthusiastic way, "the exhibitions, the festivals which are such an effort but always well worth it and the friends which I know will be life-long.

"Art," says Valentine, "is a form of communication like reading or writing and should be an inherent part of our existence...Our society will be remembered by its arts, not by accounting methods."

And Valentine will be remembered by her many contributions to art.

She plans to remain as a volunteer consultant to the center. Gallery artists Laura Carlton and Chris Rifkin will serve as interim directors. Applications for her position are now being accepted and interviews are planned to begin in August.

her talk.

"What you said changed the way I thought about the Holocaust. We had learned in school about it, but it really hit me what a horrifying, terrible thing the Holocaust really was. I think that the way you stressed the fact that we can do good or bad in our lives, but we should do good, was a beneficial approach."

"I think it is very important for the youth of this generation to understand what went on and that the Holocaust really did happen."

"What you're doing now I think will change other people's feelings about one another and stop the hatred around the world."

"I realize that it was and still is very hard to talk of your past and because of this, it makes it that much more special to hear you speak."

"As you spoke about your brothers and father, I became overwhelmed because all I could think of was, what if it ever happened to...my two brothers....[I] have tremendous respect for the way you have chosen to deal with this, which is getting it out in the open and talking about it and at the same time teaching others. I know that you made a difference in my life and those who sat in the audience with me."

'Mother Theresa' of South Shore honored

Quincy Mayor James Sheets will be joined by Hingham town officials Tuesday, July 11, from 7 to 10 p.m., at the Ocean Terrace at Quincy's Marina Bay to pay tribute to the Rev. Esther Sanger, founder and executive director of the Quincy Crisis Center and the Mary-Martha Learning Center, Main St., Hingham.

Often described as the Mother Theresa of the South Shore, Esther has dedicated her Christ-centered ministries to caring for the homeless, hungry, alcoholics, drug users, AIDS victims, battered women, elderly poor, and deserted mothers with babies.

The Rev. Sanger has been diagnosed with advanced-state terminal cancer, but as would be expected of this dynamite little woman, she rises daily to prepare for the noontime feeding program at the Faith Covenant Church in Quincy and to answer the Crisis Center's hotline. Sanger is a graduate of Eastern Nazarene College, Quincy, where she received her B.A. in social work and her M.A. in family counseling. She is also an ordained minister in the Church of the Nazarene.

The July 11 tribute will acknowledge her Christian example in crisis-intervention efforts and applaud her dedication to the many thousands of people she has compassionately served since Sanger formed Quincy Crisis Center in 1979 with the mission of community serving community.

Tickets for the tribute are $50 per person and may be obtained by calling the Quincy Crisis Center at 617-471-7075. All proceeds will benefit the Quincy Crisis Center and the Mary-Martha Learning Center.

So. Shore Charter School readies for September debut

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner Staff

Most school teachers and administrators get the summer off, but they don't work at the South Shore Charter School in Hull.

Charter School Headmaster and CEO Timothy Anderson provided an update this week on the progress of the innovative new public school which is slated to open this September.

There hasn't been much of a lull since enrollment was completed last spring, said Anderson, who has been working hard on curriculum development and hiring the new school's staff. A curriculum with project-based learning as a focus will be voted by the Charter School board tonight (July 6), Anderson said.

Staff hiring was completed last week and Anderson said a staff of 35 full- and part-time teachers and "per day" instructors will help the Charter School chart a course on its maiden voyage through the 1995-96 school year.

The hiring process was time consuming, said Anderson, who noted like any public school all positions had to be publicly posted and the interviewing and application review was extensive. Anderson said that the Charter School has matched all teachers' current salaries and benefits for the first year.

Nine of the 35 teachers are full time, three are part-time and 23 will teach on a per day basis.

One of the new part-timers will be Hingham Junior High School Science teacher John Tinker. Tinker, who has been with the Hingham public schools since 1972, will work as part-time project leader for the school in the area of science. Tinker is taking a one-year leave of absence from Hingham schools and Anderson said the hope is that Tinker will take back to the Hingham schools what he has learned in the South Shore Charter School.

Anderson said he'd like the charter school to serve as an "R and D" lab for other public schools.

In Cohasset, Anderson said he hopes to develop a cooperative program with teachers and will continue to work with Superintendent of Schools Stephen Hart.

An outgrowth of the 1993 state Education Reform Act, the charter schools offer a public school choice for parents and students across the state and could by creating competition, act to improve some ailing public school systems in the Commonwealth.

Fifteen charter schools will open this September, all governed by the same rules that govern public schools and all of them with full enrollments and many with extensive waiting lists.

Public school officials in charter school communities or nearby to them, have expressed many concerns about the experimental new public schools that could take their teachers, their students, and the tuition dollars that go with them.

According to state department of education plans, the money follows the student and the more students that go the harder the hit to the other public school's budget.

In Hull, 96 students have chosen the Charter School this year and at $4,744 per pupil that adds up to a $464,912 deficit in the Hull Public School Budget.

Five Hingham students will also try the Charter school in the fall at a cost of close to $30,000 for the town.

And in Cohasset, the number of students making the switch, has grown to 15 which could cost Cohasset Public Schools more than $75,000.

School will start for kindergartners on Tuesday, Sept. 5, and for the rest of the primary and secondary schools on Wednesday, Sept. 6, Anderson said.

In the meantime, fine tuning the Charter School curriculum continues and the Charter school's summer day camp is just about to begin. The camp is open to all, and will give kids planning to attend the school in the fall a chance to meet some of the staff and get the flavor of the school environment. Twenty-three of the 35 teachers will play some role in the four-week camp, which will offer arts and crafts, Russian, physics, sculpture, reading, technology swimming, soccer and other sports and a focus on human service, Anderson said.

The cost of the camp is $430 for the four weeks, $240 for two weeks and $135 for one week. Anyone interested should call the Charter School at 925-3078.

Monopole is not a towering issue for planners

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

At their meeting last week, the planning board agreed to support the installation of a 160-foot high communications tower off Route 3A. They will submit their recommendation to the zoning board of appeals, which must grant a permit to the tower.

To be located at 132 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, the tower will be placed some 400 to 500 feet from the highway, behind the Exotic Flowers shop, on land owned by health board member Robert Davenport.

In addition, the site is 100 feet from the nearest wetlands and in the industrial zoning district.

Kristin Appenzeller, area representative of the communications company, NEXTEL, explained that the tower is correctly called a monopole. The galvanized steel structure will be 24-inches in diameter at its base and taper off to six-inches at the top, which will contain a triangle containing the antenna.

The tower will provide communications service for a three to five mile radius, for Dispatch Communications of New England, a wholly-owned NEXTEL subsidiary, based in Newton.

She said the monopole will not be painted or lighted. The FAA only requires towers 200-feet tall to have lights on them, she said.

A small 10 by 20-foot shelter at the monopole's base will house the necessary electronic equipment. Both the shelter and the monopole will be enclosed by a six-foot high chain link fence with barbed wire on the top.

The site will be visited at least once a month, Appenzeller stated.

A monopole is built to withstand weather. However, she conceded that it could be blown over by a tornado. When they do fall, monopoles are designed to collapse upon themselves and not topple onto neighboring buildings.

Similar monopoles are now operating or under construction in South Boston and Mattapan.

The planning board members did not see any harm in the tower.

However, William Good said it is the kind of thing which will generate comments.

"It's just one of the things people will say, 'What the hell's that?' " he remarked.

Moore speculated that the ZBA would allow the monopole, but could attach conditions. "They'll tell you, you can't sell milk," he joked, in reference to the ZBA's proclivity for limiting fast food operations.

Delivery services, taxi companies and other businesses which require constant communications are the primary clients of Dispatch Communications, Appenzeller said.

Headquartered in Rutherford, New Jersey, NEXTEL is traded on NASDAQ.

Sea 'n Cheese restaurant scraps North Scituate plans

By Heather Prouty
Mariner staff

Citing a disagreement over lease arrangements, Sea 'n Cheese owner Rick Peters says he will not relocate his popular food market to North Scituate Village.

"What (the landlord) wanted and what I wanted was too far apart," said Peters about the lease, which was drafted in May. "We couldn't agree on terms." Peters said he was advised by his attorney not to sign the agreement.

"(Peters) made the business decision not to move in," said David Ford, who owns the Gannett Road plaza. A Newton resident and Humarock homeowner, Ford says he is currently looking for a tenant to fill the 2,200 square-foot space that was to be occupied by Sea 'n Cheese. The space was previously leased by Yarn Over and the Country Package Store.

"I've had people lining up for it. It's a beautiful spot. It won't be vacant for long," Ford said of the site, which now sits littered with construction debris and a "for rent" sign posted in the window.

Peters, who was forced to vacate his store's previous location in Cohasset's Cushing Plaza after it was bought out by Shaw's supermarkets, had spent nearly a year searching for a new space before finally coming upon the North Scituate spot in March.

He had begun refurbishing the North Scituate site in hopes of moving in earlier this month, and closed down his Cushing Plaza store two weeks ago.

Since the North Scituate Village deal fell through, Peters has been looking for another space for his store. But as he learned in his last search, vacancies in Scituate and Cohasset, the towns crucial to Sea 'n Cheese's success, are hard to find.

Many venues Peters has looked at do not have septic systems large enough to accommodate the store's water usage.

Although Peters, who opened the successful store 12 years ago, hopes something will become available, he is not ruling out closing Sea 'n Cheese altogether.

"How long can you go without working?" he questioned.

"I hate to lose Sea 'n Cheese because there's no space, but that's the reality. I'm taking it day by day," said Peters, adding that he would like to remain in the food business.

Peters isn't the only one disappointed about the failed deal.

"I think it's a loss. It would have been a nice addition to the village," said Charlotte Phinney, owner of Charlotte's Hair Etc. in the Gannett Road plaza. " I think there's a lot of people that are going to miss it."

Phinney, who believes the extra customers brought to the village by Sea 'n Cheese would have benefited all of the businesses there, said she had never had a problem with Ford. "He's terrific and cooperative."

"I'm devastated. I've been waiting for it to open," said Cohasset resident Rita Kirk, a long-time Sea 'n Cheese shopper. Kirk had been looking forward to frequenting the North Scituate Sea 'n Cheese location, which is much closer to her South Main Street home than the Cushing Plaza site.

Another Sea 'n Cheese devotee, Scituate resident Mary Roberts, was equally dismayed about the recent turn of events. "I hope they can find someplace to go. I'd miss it if it went out of business."

What an accomplishment! Next time you see Lynn "around town," be sure to acknowledge her spectacular feat!

A piano recital by the students of Florence Jerome was held Thursday, June 16, at her home, 268 Beechwood St. The recital was unique due to the fact that all the students had begun their piano study in September, 1994, or later. This was pointed out to the audience to make them aware of the various levels of accomplishment possible in one year's work. The Cohasset children who participated were: Kelsey Henderson, Abby Murphy and Nick Murphy. Mrs. Jerome held a small reception for the students and their guests following the performance.

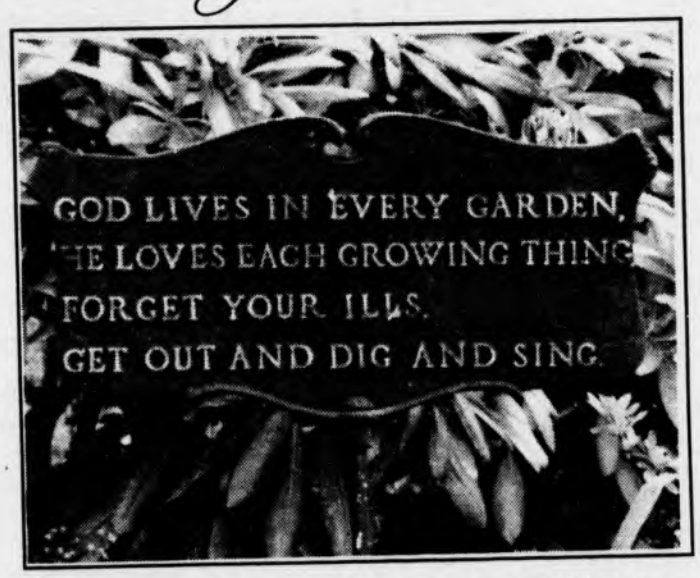
The Grand Tour — with Ginger Ferenz, 383-2863



Josephine Coleman of 219 Beechwood Street invited us to photograph and share her gardens filled with perennials and especially her many beautiful Rhododendrons. As you enter her gravel drive you leave the sounds of traffic behind and you are surrounded by curving beds filled with lush color. Every shade of Rhododendron is represented from dark, rich maroon, bright fuchsia, pale-mauve pink, creamy yellow, ivory and salmon pink. The beds are sprinkled with blooming white Dogwood with under-plantings of Virginia Blue Bell, Lily of the Valley, bright green and blue Hostas, purple and pink Columbine, Day Lilies, and many wild flowers. Mrs. Coleman has artistically created a woodland setting for her beautiful plantings. She has a small sign displayed in one of her beds saying "God lives in every garden,

He loves each growing thing
Forget you ills,
Get out and dig and sing."

Good advice, Thank you, Mrs. Coleman, for inviting us into your garden sanctuary!

Making the case for rail

After a decade of studying Greenbush transportation solutions — we're now told that a guided busway system only used in two cities in the world might work here.

At the 11th hour, we're told there's no federal money left for a commuter train — a mode of mass transit that works in every other area in greater Boston and is being expanded on several lines.

We're told that state money could be raised for an untested system of buses which will have to operate in all types of weather.

We're told that these buses would move along the 18-mile long Greenbush right-of-way to Braintree where they would join the regular traffic along Route 3 and enter the high-occupancy-vehicle lane on the Southeast Expressway.

Then at Freeport Street the buses would again join regular traffic for the final leg into Boston.

State Transportation Secretary James Kerasiotes has been quoted as describing the busway system as "exciting, futuristic and forward thinking."

He says the system can be built for $126 million which is a few million more than half the cost of the train.

And finally we're told a quick 60-day study will determine if the busways are feasible.

For any mass transit system to work, commuters must be convinced to get out of their cars. Riding in a bus that's going to get stuck in traffic in Braintree and Boston won't do the trick.

Mr. Kerasiotes apparently also fails to understand that a large part of the anti-train fervor comes from abutters, who won't sit still for concrete tracks filled with streams of articulated buses travelling through their backyards.

We may not be transportation experts but common sense tells us that this misguided busway system would be a multi-million dollar white elephant, a colossal waste of money.

We think the state has over-estimated opposition to the train which could provide fast, convenient and efficient commuter transportation for the South Shore well into the next century.

State Rep. Frank Hynes (D-Marshfield/Scituate) says it's time to re-energize and use the next 60 days to make the case for rail.

We remain convinced that restoring the train along the Greenbush Line will have the greatest environmental, economic and quality-of-life benefits over time.

Mr. Kerasiotes and the Weld administration should put the South Shore's transportation needs at the top of the list by prioritizing the federal money the state receives so that Greenbush can be paid for as promised.

We have a right to a mass transit system. Through MBTA assessments, we're already paying for commuter rail enjoyed by Massachusetts commuters in other areas.

It's time to insist that we get a workable solution to commuter grid-lock in our South Shore corridor.

Service group appreciates help

(Editor's note: a copy of the following open letter to Cohasset citizens was provided to the Mariner.)

To the people of Cohasset:

A great big hug and warm thanks to you for helping 82 youths and adults journey to eastern Kentucky. We felt your support across the mountains and miles as we labored in our efforts to help the wonderful people of this Appalachian region. We tried to make them "safer, drier and warmer," and we could not have been there without your prayers, thoughts and generosity.

If you ever ordered an ASP sub or salad, bought a T-shirt or shares of ASP stock, used our autumn yard cleaning service, ate one of our Thanksgiving pies or breads, bought or bid on something at our yard sale, had your car washed by our group, gave us a "smile or a thumb's up", or tossed a penny into the fountain at Hanover Mall, you helped the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project.

You joined us as we joined 8,000 volunteers in the South this summer trying to bring some hope and pride to these good folk.

Quite frankly, we got much more than we gave. Thank you for all your support.

Take time to donate blood this summer

To the Editor:

With summer upon us, the American Red Cross wishes to remind members of the community that traditionally this is a time of concern about the adequacy of our blood supply. Summer is vacation time for many, and with high school and college donors on break, the number of people supporting the blood supply diminishes.

Across the nation, only six percent of those eligible to participate in the volunteer blood donor program do so. At the same time, most of us will require a blood transfusion at some time during our lives. Clearly, more people are needed to become blood donors, during the summer and all years long. And those who already participate in the blood donor program are asked to try to give as often as they are eligible (generally six times per year).

Blood is a life-saving, national resource that must be replenished each and ever day. The leading users of blood include patients diagnosed with conditions such as cancer, heart disease, gastrointestinal disease, anemia, fractures, trauma, liver, kidney and lung disease and bone and joint disease.

Please take the time to schedule an appointment to donate blood by calling the Red Cross at 1-800-GIVE-LIFE. You can give blood as often as every eight weeks, and play a critical part in maintaining a precious, life-saving resource for our community.

Coalition backs transportation approach

The operating committee of the Coastal Coalition met this week to discuss the recent MBTA decision to cancel rail restoration in favor of a guided busway system up the Greenbush corridor. Prior to the meeting, leaders heard from constituents and citizens in Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate on this newest proposal. The Coastal Coalition does not support a train or bus up the right of way and continues to support two complementary systems as the solution to the South Shore's transportation needs.

"We strongly urge Gov. Weld, Lt. Gov. Celluci and Secretary Kerasiotes to improve the boat/bus link and develop a dedicated busway system on Rt. 3," said Ilana Marks, spokesperson for the Coalition. "These two systems working simultaneously would be the most efficient, cost-effective and environmentally responsible alternative. The Rt. 3 busway would serve commuters from Marshfield, Duxbury and Norwell, while the boats would serve remaining coastal communities. This is a far more regional approach to our transportation needs."

The Coastal Coalition will pursue newly learned information that a HOV lane from Duxbury to Hingham has already received environmental and financial approval and could be implemented at any time to facilitate a Rt. 3 busway.

Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe concluded earlier this month that the MBTA needs to seriously restudy several areas of the EIR, including the boat/bus link.

Gil Wilder, the citizen who first suggested a dedicated busway up Rt. 3, is disappointed with the current MBTA proposal. "They are taking a good technology and running it up a cowpath," he said.

Nicole Peterson

Student of the month

Nicole is quiet and reserved, but she's a "dynamite" person who is responsible, highly principled and very genuine. As a peer counselor and tutor, Nicole has demonstrated time and again that she is caring and very willing to give of herself. I have had the pleasure of co-leading small seventh-grade groups with Nicole and have found her to be an excellent role model. In addition to working with small groups, Nicole tutors/counsels several students individually, sacrificing her own study periods and time, but she is also doing an excellent job.

Nicole has also contributed to our community through the Social Awareness Committee. Some of those activities include the recycling program, working at a homeless shelter and most recently, donating approximately six hours of her time to the Cohasset Round Race.

Nicole Peterson, in my mind, is an outstanding candidate for the "Student of the Month" award, based on her contributions to our school, our younger students and our community. I thoroughly endorse her and recommend her with pleasure.

Derby Academy presents 'Dolly'

Derby Academy Upper School students in Hingham recently presented their first performance of "Hello Dolly!" at the school's annual Derby Day graduation exercises.

The cast combined the talents of seventh-, eighth- and ninth-graders. Cohasset residents included Alexander "Boomer" Gaston as Horace Vandergelder; Jamie Simons as Cornelius Hackl; Ian Simons as Rudolph; Neely Wakeman as a waiter; Beth Pierson as a hostess; Elliot Noon as a policeman and Ian Simons as a judge.

Old-fashioned dresses, hats, parasols and knickers adorned the characters, and the colorful set designs were successful in placing the cast back to the early 1900's.

'Thanks' to room mothers

The Osgood PSO wishes to thank all of the people who served as room mothers this year. Room mothers are the vital communication link between home, school and the PSO. They coordinate the many volunteer activities within the classroom and establish emergency school closing lists.

Room mothers also help with special projects, fundraising events, class parties and make hundreds of telephone calls. It was a great year at the Osgood School and the Osgood PSO could not have done it without the time, effort and enthusiasm of the room mothers.

Chapel program held at Derby

Derby Academy recently held its last Chapel Program for the academic year, which included the presentation of academic, athletic and art awards to outstanding students. Faculty member Robert Crawford and ninth-grader John Corbin Caruso addressed the group.

Headmaster Edward R. Foley opened the chapel service with a welcoming address.

Cohasset student Beth Pierson received the Frances Ranieri Math Award, while Ian Simons, student council president, also a Cohasset resident, and ninth-grade advisor Ivy Butterworth presented the Ninth Grade Gift to the school. Departing eighth-grade students received certificates from trustee president Bruce Minevitz. They included Cohasset residents Alexander Gifford Gaston, Patrick Robert Gaughen, Elizabeth Brundage Pierson and Cornelia Barton.

PSO announces board members

The Cohasset PSO Joint Board Meeting was held recently. Newly elected school committee chairman Ralph Kidder addressed the board members and offered thanks for their support and appreciation for parent involvement in Cohasset's schools.

President Debbie Shadd thanked outgoing members for their dedication and welcomed new board members. The 1994-95 PSO Annual report was distributed. Copies are available at all school offices and at the Paul Pratt Library.

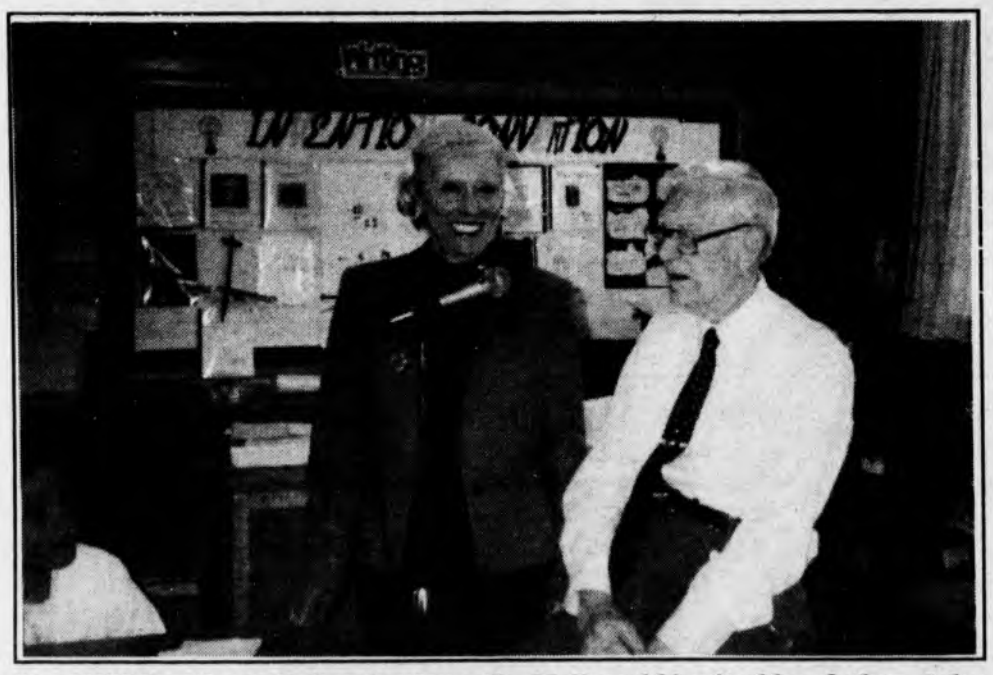
Executive board members for 1995-96 are: president, Debbie Shadd; vice president, Kathy Ofsthun; corresponding secretary, Jean Muir; recording secretary, Jane Pescatore; treasurer, Bob Anton; Osgood School representatives, Mary Daniels and Linda Simms; Deer Hill representatives, Linda Bolster and Helene Garber; Junior high representatives, Judy Moore and Allison Ulmer; Senior high representatives, Kyle Lubitz and Betty O'Sullivan; curriculum enrichment, Joan Jensen and Susan Pile; fundraising, Tomi Bukowski, Ed Connolly, Ellen Sanchez; METCO, Connie Afshar and Cliff Chase; PSO activities, Susan Carr and Mary Sullivan; publicity, Pearl Smith and Jan Weisenfeld; special needs, Marie Calorio and Lyn Previte; community relations, Sarah Markert and diversity committee, Susan Etkind.

Student honored

Cohasset Junior High School student Brianne McKenney was recently honored for her outstanding verbal and/or mathematical ability discovered in the 1995 annual Talent Search conducted by the Johns Hopkins University Center for Talented Youth.

The seventh-grade honor student, who scored well above the mean for high school seniors on the SAT I: Reasoning Test, received a certificate of merit at the state level in an awards ceremony on June 4 at Boston University.

Intergenerational party held at Deer Hill School



Deer Hill fourth-grade teacher Dorothy McDonald invited her father, John McDonald to class recently to celebrate his 99th birthday.

Dorothy McDonald, a fourth-grade teacher at the Deer Hill School, invited John McDonald to her classroom recently to celebrate his 99th birthday. The party included cake, candles, song and dance. (Mr. McDonald loves to waltz.)

Having arrived home after spending the winter in California, Mr. McDonald will get back into his routine here, which includes driving to church on Sunday and to Stop and Shop each week.

The students enjoyed asking Mr. McDonald questions about what it was like growing up so many years ago. David Crowley-Buck asked, "What was school like growing up in Nova Scotia?"

"It was a one-room K-8 school with one teacher for eight years," Mr. McDonald answered.

Another student, John Friedman, wanted to know if he were teased in school. Mr. McDonald said he was teased a lot for not smoking.

Shawna Sullivan wanted to know what it was like during World War I. McDonald replied that it was scary. "As we sailed from New York harbor, I was afraid I would never see the Statue of Liberty again."

The students hope Mr. McDonald will be willing to come back and celebrate his 100th birthday with them.

Clutch hitter set for Junior Olympics

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

Just talking with 11-year-old Greg Smith gives one the impression he is fearless when it comes to pressure situations. Talking with his A.A.U. Junior Olympic baseball coach, Steve Almonte, just reaffirms the fact Greg thrives on being the player in the batter's box when his team needs a clutch hit.

"He has repeatedly gotten big hits for us," said Almonte of the personable Deer Hill School fifth grader. "He rarely strikes out. Greg's a gamer. When he's up and the game's on the line, Greg digs in and puts his nose to the grindstone."

An All-Star member of the Major League Pirates in the Cohasset Little League, Greg was selected to the A.A.U. Junior Olympic squad, the South Shore Baseball Club Sea Dogs. With a 5-2-1 record, the Sea Dogs have to beat the Lowell squad in a best 3 of 5 series on July 8-9 to qualify for the national tournament in Kenner, Louisiana from July 29-August 5, against 36 of the best teams in the country in the 11-and-under age group. Greg and perennial Cohasset All-Star Ben Maitland have the distinction of being the only two players from the league to be selected to the 13-member team. Scituate All-Star Jesse Cole was also named to the squad.

Greg was one of 35 players to try out for the Sea Dogs during two sessions. The first was held at the South Shore Baseball Club over the February vacation and the second took place outdoors in May in Braintree.

Almonte networked with coaches throughout the South Shore to recruit players for the club. The result was "the most exceptional baseball players in the area." And as far as Almonte is concerned, Greg is very much a part of that group and a key to the Sea Dogs' success.

"Greg is an outstanding 11-year-old baseball player," Almonte said. "He's very quick footed. Greg has tremendous hands and has real good dexterity. He's very quick, intelligent and is a nice boy."

Almonte said Greg's "primary role" on the team will be filling the right field position. As a lefty with a strong arm, Almonte believes Greg will be a definite asset to the team because he doesn't have to throw across his body the way right-handed players do. He has Greg batting fifth and sixth in the batting order.

All-Star Greg Smith is the man to have at the plate when the team needs a clutch hit.

For Greg, playing on the Junior Olympic team has been vastly different from the town league. He is among the cream of the crop of Massachusetts players so it is no surprise to him the play is more intense.

"It's not like Little League," Greg said. "When you make a mistake in Little League they pretty much forget about it. When you make a mistake on the Junior Olympic team they (coaches) get on you because they want you to be true All-Stars and as good as you can be."

Greg had a strong Little League season and was deserving of his All-Star status. He clubbed two home runs over the Barnes Memorial Field fence and, in one Pirates' win, slammed four doubles while going a perfect 5 for 5 at the plate.

A pitcher as well, Greg showed his true competitiveness on the mound. Called to pitch relief in a game against the Mets, Greg didn't have his best stuff and was knocked around and was unable to garner the save. Primed and ready for his second opportunity later in the season, Greg was not about to let this one get away. Angry and determined, he proceeded to keep the Mets guessing all afternoon with his pitches. Greg finished with a two-hitter and seven strike outs in the 2-0 win.

"I really wanted to get that loss back," he said.

To prepare for the tourney, the Sea Dogs played 12-year-old All-Stars from other teams. Greg found the games a challenge and expects them to be beneficial in the long run.

"We expect the competition to be harder than the regular town league so it helps to play the older guys," he said.

Despite his love for the game, baseball is hardly the only sport Greg is involved in. He was a member of the this past spring's Massachusetts champion MBA Breakers of Weymouth and also takes sailing classes and rides his mountain bike on the trails of Wompatuck State Park and Thayer Woods.

The one constant in Greg's life is that he remains active, whether he is on the baseball field or not. "I need something else to do besides baseball," Greg explained, "because baseball doesn't happen every single day."

Still, it is hard for him to completely break away from the game during his free time.

"When I don't have a practice I play in pick-up games with my friends," Greg admitted.

The work he has put in has definitely made the difference for Greg Smith. Make that All-Star Greg Smith.

Cowans shine in Hingham Road Race

Mary and Thomas Cowan made Tuesday's running of the Hingham Fourth of July Road Race well worth their effort with strong performances in their respective categories. Thomas finished in fourth place in the Men's 60-98 Age Group with a time of 35 minutes 26 seconds for the lightning-fast 4.6-mile course, an average of 7:42 per mile. Mary maintained a 9:48 per mile clip in the race and wound up taking second in the women's division of the same age group. Her finishing time was 45:06.

This year's race, which began at the junior high and followed Main Street to the finish in front of Loring Hall, was the biggest in the event's history with 1,347 entrants.

Softball player seeking lost shirt

Rachel Doyle is asking for anyone who may have found a red "Lady Bugs" softball team shirt at the town pool after the June 29, Softball Jamboree to call her at 383-9767. The shirt has the number 16 on the back and says "Genovese Reality.

"My shirt means a lot to me and I hope I get it back," Rachel said.

If recent history is any guide then the late June Supreme Court decision to allow random drug testing of high school athletes could be opening a huge can of legal worms for South Shore athletes.

Just about everyone agrees that high school athletics and drugs do not mix.

But the big question is what can educators do to get this message across.

Until recently, they had to mostly rely on education and the legal system.

But now, thanks to the Supreme Court, there can be random drug testing for high school athletes.

In theory, this sounds great. Anyone playing sports now knows they must avoid taking any kind of drugs or they could be bounced from the team or worse.

It seems perfectly clear. Don't do drugs and you'll be fine. (Many businesses, including this newspaper, drug test all employees before they are hired.)

But the reality of drug testing is a much different story.

Science, as we've all seen from the O.J. Simpson trial, is far from perfect.

Errors can be made even under the best conditions.

And a few mistakes (like a false-positive result here and there) is all it will take to throw a monkey wrench into high school random drug testing plans.

If you don't believe me, consider the following:

Earlier this school-year, a Hanover High School basketball player claimed he didn't make the varsity team because his hair was too long. Apparently, the coach had a dress and grooming code for the team and this player didn't make the cut, so to speak.

And after much wrangling between the player, the coach, the school administration and the courts, the issue was settled when the player was allowed to return to the team. (By the way, the player decided not to play after all.)

But the Hair-Gate controversy drained a lot of joy from the basketball season at Hanover High and took the focus away from the sport and moved it into the court system.

Random drug testing could have the same divisive effect at a high school.

For a moment, let's imagine that a standout student-athlete gets booted from a team after testing positive for an illegal drug during a random test.

Pretty soon the whispers start around the town that top player Johnny Jones is on drugs. College coaches hear about Jones and decide to scout some other player.

Jones disputes the test results, claiming it was a false-positive result, and decides to sue the school system and the coach for defamation of character and discrimination.

It takes Jones all of 30 seconds to find a lawyer's name in the Yellow Pages and just like that, it's Perry Mason time for the school system.

The Hair-Gate controversy took several weeks to be resolved and many trees died to print all the hairy details.

South Shore Community Center gymnasts shine

June 4 some of the gymnasts with the SSCC Gymnast in Motion program traveled to Methuen for the American Athletic Union Gymnastic Regional Championships. All gymnasts who were competing had to qualify to make it to the regionals.

The age 9-11 novice gymnasts competed in the morning. The 9-11 team placed fifth in the team competition. Individually, Caitlin Flint placed second in the All Around with a first on Bars, sixth on Floor and sixth on Vault. Teammate Melanie Suddath placed sixth on Bars and teammate Charlie Carter placed ninth on Bars.

The 12-to 14-year-old notice gymnasts competed in the afternoon. Competing for the SSCC were Alisha Suddath and Lauren Genovese. Lauren rounded out the competition with a fifth in the All Around and fourth on Beam, fifth on Bars, second on Floor and sixth on Vault.

The gymnasts listed above train at the South Shore Community Center "Gymnast in Motion Program" under the direction of Ruthann Ardizzoni. Flint will compete at Level 8 in the fall, Carter and Melanie Suddath will compete at Level 6. Alisha Suddath will be at Level 5, and maybe you remember Lauren Genovese, who has competed for Cohasset High School's varsity gymnastics team for the past two years. Lauren was voted Most Spirited Gymnast for 1995 and competed on three events most of the season.

Lacrosse clinic planned

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations at their office, at 383-6791, for an evening lacrosse skill development program, designed for youngsters who will enter grades 4, 5 and 6 in September.

Lacrosse clinics are designed to teach youngsters fundamental skills and concepts of lacrosse and will meet Tuesday evenings, 6:30 p.m. to 8 p.m., at the Deer Hill School, beginning Tuesday evening, July 11 through August 15.

This specialized developmental program will be instructed by local college and high school lacrosse players and the fee will be $26 per person for the six sessions. Participants will need a helmet and lacrosse stick to enroll. Other equipment will be unnecessary as no contact scrimmages will be held.

VIP soccer camp registrations

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting registrations for VIP soccer camp, for children ages 4-7 years.

VIP soccer camp offers two programs for boys and girls, ages 4-7. ABC Soccer is especially designed for 4- and 5-year-olds and meets from 8 to 9:30 a.m., Monday through Friday, July 17 through July 21. The cost is $40 for the week.

Both VIP programs will be held this year at the front field of Cohasset High School.

Can you imagine how long a drug test case could take?

It might be best for area schools to start slowly in regards to drug testing student-athletes.

Start out by drug testing only when there appears to be just cause. (A player missing a lot of practices or getting in trouble with the local police, for example.)

Also, the testing technology must be the most accurate and up to date to avoid any errors.

And lastly, a drug testing system must be put in place that is cost-effective.

As it is now, there is hardly enough budget money for JV uniforms or medical trainers. If there aren't any drug problems at a school, then it makes no sense to spend all kinds of money to take on a problem that really doesn't exist.

Good public relations is one thing (school administrators sure love to toot their own horns whenever possible) but throwing money away that could be better spent is another matter entirely.

Because we have more time to do features over the summer, there are a slew we have lined up for the sunny months. Still, some are on the list that may not make it in the paper by September. Here's a small sample of those that probably won't make the cut, try as we might:

- Little League coaches and their All-Star sons.
- The Wonderful World of Gimp.
- Sleeping In: A week at field hockey camp.
- Wahle: The unauthorized biography.
- Gulping slush and the migraine headache.
- That wild and wacky whiffle ball.
- Park instructors and the nervous breakdown.
- The Route 3A drag race.
- School nicknames and their origins.
- Sports cards shows and the dirty dealers.
- Speedos and why men wear them.
- History of the thong bikini.
- Jams: A look back at the neon fashion trend.

Anyone who has ever scoffed at the idea of getting in a workout by doing aerobics obviously has never gone through a one-hour session.

I have to admit, before I was put through the rigors I questioned whether it would be intense enough to get my heart rate raised high enough to constitute a quality workout. Once I was done, I questioned whether or not I'd be able to walk to my car.

Of course I found myself in a class that was way over my head. Not only did the instructor have a perfectly sculptured body and a washboard stomach, but the added stress of having to keep up with the rest of the class was truly a supreme effort on my part, if I do say so myself.

About 30 minutes into the workout I was still breezing along, though I could tell the next half hour would feel longer than the first. To make things even more interesting, the instructor had everyone in the class do the exercises holding two-pound weights in each hand. Now that may not sound heavy, and it's not. But they feel nowhere near two pounds once you've been holding them out straight for three minutes during an exercise.

I left the class tired, sore and with a newfound respect for the women in the leotards who put in aerobics workouts almost every day of the week. They're as tough as any competitive athlete.

Soccer camp applications available

Registrations for South Shore Soccer Camp have begun for boys and girls ages 8-18. This is South Shore Soccer Camp's fifth year of operation in Cohasset. If you are interested in registering for South Shore Soccer Camp, it is suggested that you write to the Cohasset Recreation Department, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall, or call 383-6791 in the near future, to be assured enrollment.

South Shore Soccer Camp will be offered to both girls and boys during the weeks of Monday to Friday, July 31 to Aug. 4, and Aug. 7 to Aug. 11. Should a camper wish to attend both camp weeks, this will now be possible. In order to choose the week of camp you desire, early registration is advised as both camp weeks must be restricted in number.

Camp meets daily, Mondays to Fridays, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. The cost for camp is $165 per week and discounts for multiple weeks and subsequent children are available. South Shore Soccer Camp represents top-flight training, delivered by top college and high school coaches and players from the New England area.

Beechwood supper

The Beechwood Congregational Church, Church St., Cohasset, will hold a ham and bean supper on Saturday, July 15, at 6:30 p.m. Guests are invited to listen to big band recordings following coffee and dessert.

Tickets, which are $5.99 for adults and $2.99 for children, must be purchased in advance from church members or by calling 383-1298.

Teen center update

The Cohasset teen center summer hours are Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 7 to 10 p.m. Every Friday night will be movie night, with the feature starting at 7:30 p.m.

Thursday, July 20, the teen center sponsors a trip to a Pawtucket Red Sox game. Game ticket and bus ride will be $10, and members must be signed up, with permission slips in, by Friday, July 14. Two trip tickets will be raffled off, so drop by and fill out a raffle ticket anytime the center is open. For further information call Craig Muir at 383-1060, 383-1850 evenings, or Rosemary O'Connell at 383-6552.

The teen center is open to all Cohasset residents in grades 7, 8 or 9 beginning in September. Tenth through twelfth graders are welcome as well. Opportunities for community service volunteer hours as staff assistants at the center are coordinated through Rose Collins at 383-0760. Staff applicants should call Rosemary O'Connell. The center is totally supported by community contributions and center fundraisers.

During Harborfest/Festival on the Common '95, one such fun fundraiser was the Cohasset teen center fastball radar speed trap, located opposite the community center. Speeders were handed, not tickets by local police and volunteers, but certificates recording the speed of their best pitch. Unofficial record holders for this year are Kevin Lewis for the 5-6 year olds with 22 miles per hour; tied champs David Proctor and Greg Smith for the 11-12 year olds with 65 mph; and Jeff Littlehale for the 17 and older crowd with 71 mph. There were some other impressive records set, not higher records perhaps, but impressive records, that were too hard to read. Wait 'til next year ...

Contributions to the teen center are always welcome and put to the good use of running the center. They can be sent to Cohasset Youth Resources, P.O. Box 11, Cohasset 02025.

New museum hours

The Cohasset Historical Society has expanded the hours the Maritime Museum will be open to visitors. Interested citizens have volunteered their time to staff the museum on Saturdays from 9 a.m. to noon through the end of August. Until this year the museum was only open during afternoons.

The museum, located on Elm St. in Cohasset Village, exhibits a Minot Ledge Lighthouse collection and many exhibits documenting Cohasset's distinguished maritime history.

Maritime Museum hours are Saturdays through Aug. 26 from 9 a.m. to noon. The museum is also open day through through Sept. 30, 1:30 to 4:30 p.m.

The Cohasset Historical Society also opens the adjacent Captain John Wilson House, built in 1810, from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. with the assistance of trained guides. David Wadsworth is the society's curator. This summer the Wilson House will be displayed as a 1910 teahouse, which it was at that time. For further information or to arrange a special tour, call 383-1434.

Watercolors' exhibit

Page Railsback's watercolor exhibit entitled "Plein Air" opened at the library last Thursday, June 29, beginning with a reception for the local artist.

Page paints contemporary realistic watercolors and has had numerous one-man shows. Officials say:

Permanent solution to water problems in sight

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

A year ago record demand for water with the onset of summer wreaked havoc with Cohasset's antiquated system of pumps, pipes and water mains.

And again this summer residents along the so-called "Gold Coast" in the Linden Drive/Rust Way area — which is the farthest point from the town's water supply — turned on their faucets or tried to flush their toilets to no avail.

But gone this year is the public outcry.

Under new management, the water department along with the town's board of water commissioners have the solution to the town's water pressure problem in sight.

'This will be a bad memory.'
—Richard Cohan, operations manager of Cohasset Water Services.

"This will be a bad memory," said Richard Cohan, operations manager of Cohasset Water Services, which is under contract to run the water department.

Cohan explained that once the Forest Avenue water main loop is complete — the lack of water pressure along the coast will be remedied.

About 6,000 feet of water main is being laid along Forest Avenue. The work should be completed by Labor Day, Cohan said.

He likened the current situation to pinching a hose at the end to restrict supply. But once the loop comes around the other end, the results would be like attaching a supply hose.

"There'll be plenty of water," Cohan said.

In the interim as a stop-gap measure to increase water pressure in the affected areas, water commis-

Public hearing on boat yard fate is Tuesday

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

The state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) will hold a public hearing at 10:30 a.m., Tuesday (July 18) at Cohasset Town Hall on the Waterways License Application of William Hanney for the property at 88 Border Street which houses a local harbor boat yard.

Hanney, president of the Stoughton-based Entertainment Cinemas, bought the 16,000 square-foot parcel two years ago from Peoples' Bank of Brockton which had foreclosed in the prior owner and reportedly wants to turn at least part of the site into a residence.

Last summer at a meeting at the Mill River Marine Railway, Hanney's attorney Charles Humphreys said the owner's goal is to live there.

"How he gets to that point has not been resolved," Humphreys said at that hearing.

People urged to take the plunge

Does a little hard work and no pay appeal to you? If so, you may just be one of the citizens selectmen are looking for.

They are actively soliciting volunteers who would like to get involved in town government by serving on an appointed board.

Urgently needed is a citizen to serve as associate commissioner on the Conservation Commission, which takes on a range of environmental issues that affect Cohasset. Commissioners on this board recently waded through plans for Shaw's Supermarket at Cushing Plaza to make sure that wetlands and buffer zones were protected among other concerns. Please call the selectmen's office at 383-9900 if you're interested.

The Americans With Disabilities Act is a federal law with implications at the local level. The Commission on Disabilities will deal with the law and its impact on Cohasset. That board needs an enthusiastic new recruit.

Does that old New England flavor of Cohasset Common appeal to you? If

Cohasset's week

Boy injured in accident

An 11-year-old Cohasset boy was injured after a car struck his bike at the Sohier/Ripley Road intersection at about 1:55 p.m. Monday and allegedly dragged him more than 85 feet, police said.

Police cited the Neil Frazer, 90, of 50 Todd Road, who was driving the car, with operating negligently, failure to yield for a bicycle, and failure to yield at a crosswalk.

The victim, Brendan Goff, 30 Hammond Ave., was transported to South Shore Hospital where he was treated and released.

Brendan's mother, Anne Marie Goff, said Tuesday that Brendan's legs are "torn up pretty badly" and that the fact he was wearing a helmet saved Brendan from more severe injuries.

Police said the accident is still under investigation.

Incident on Forest Ave.

Forest Avenue was closed for about an hour Monday afternoon following two coincidental incidents. A front-loader vehicle jumped out of gear and backed into a telephone pole while another machine that was digging ruptured a gas main.

"We had live wires down and a gas leak at the same time," Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said.

The front-loader, which was unmanned, backed down the hill toward the ocean and hit a telephone pole breaking it in half, according to Richard Cohan, operations manager at Cohasset Water Services.

Forest Street is being dug up to install a water main.

At about the same time, a gas main was struck during the construction. The gas and electric companies responded along with Cohasset police and fire. There were no injuries.

"Luckily the gas and electric companies responded quickly, so we stood by until the two items were taken care of," Lincoln said.

Ambulance billing update

The fire department collected $10,408.41 in ambulance bills last month. So far for Fiscal Year 1995, which ended June 30, the town has collected $91,849.63 out of a possible $104,368.19. Unpaid ambulance bills for FY'93, '94 and '95 total $43,824.40.

Cemetery board resignation

Selectmen tabled accepting the resignation of Nancy Snowdale from the Cemetery Study Committee until Chairman Merle Brown has a chance to speak with Snowdale, acting Selectmen Chairmen Peter Pratt said this week.

In her letter of resignation, Snowdale expressed frustration with the progress of the current committee and suggested selectmen "reform" the committee and charge it to hold monthly meetings for "this priority project," Snowdale wrote.

"Having been involved in the Smith Place site/Pleasant Street study, the search of available sites for the 25-year charge, including 3-A studies and finally obtaining existing funds for the expansion and beautification of Beechwood Cemetery, which was voted at Town Meeting in Oct. '94, I assumed plans would proceed in a timely manner," she said.

Snowdale said meetings of the cemetery committee and new members have not been scheduled since October '94. She also suggested the town sponsor legislation to remove it from the burden of providing cemetery space because of the lack of available land.

Dramatic Club requests

Selectmen approved the request of the Cohasset Dramatic Club to conduct a total of four shows at town hall next season in October, December, March and April.

Selectmen also approved acceptance of an offer of $700 from the CDC, which is in its 75th year, to help offset bills for maintenance, electricity and heat incurred as a result of rehearsals and shows.

Legal bills are paid

More than $42,000 in professional statements dating from December 1994 through the end of February 1995 from the law firm Warner & Stackpole, which acts as special legal counsel for the town in matters relating to Cohasset Heights Landfill, were approved by selectmen for payment this week. The board tabled two additional bills for March for a total of about $14,500 until members can get clarification from Town Counsel Richard Henderson on certain items in the statements. Selectman Martha Gjesteby was concerned about a $21 lunch on one bill, for example.

Selectman Peter Pratt, who was serving as acting chairman this week in Selectman Merle Brown's absence, voted with the majority to approve payment of the $42,000 in bills at this time because the firm had done the work. In the past, Pratt has objected to paying the bills because the town did not seek a Request for Proposal from interested law firms to see if the town is getting the best price for its contracted legal services. Approval of a town meeting appropriation last spring to cover remaining legal bills incurred in FY'95 on the Cohasset Heights issue, was predicated on the town issuing an RFP, Pratt said.

Goedecke stays on Coalition

Selectman Jane Goedecke will continue to represent Cohasset on the South Shore Coalition of which she is current chairman, selectmen said this week. The 10-town Coalition works on coming up with regional solutions to issues for its member towns.

Town boards join forces to respond to landfill filing

By Matt Pueschel
Mariner correspondent

Selectmen met Thursday (July 6) with the conservation commission and health board, agreeing to petition the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act for a 30-day extension to comment on a Comprehensive Site Assessment (CSA) filed by Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL).

There will be a selectmen's meeting July 20 to formulate a comment letter after the three boards meet again July 19 with representatives from the town's engineering consulting firm, Camp, Dresser and McKee (CDM), to go over details in the CSA.

The CSA is a summation of the landfill's environmental impact on the area, and part of a process owner Paul Barry is undertaking to ask the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) for permission to expand.

"We will be essentially telling the environmental secretary where we feel the CSA is lacking in response to our environmental concerns," Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon said. "Most people don't want to see the landfill expanded because of groundwater contamination."

There have been reports of leachate contamination from the Trustees of Reservation, which owns Whitney Woods, and concerns expressed for the well-being of the town's water supply at Lily Pond — but Barry maintains his operation is environmentally sound and doesn't threaten groundwater.

Health Board member Alix White, former president of Stop Any Further Expansion (S.A.F.E.), a citizens' group opposed to expansion of the landfill, expressed her concern for air quality surrounding CHL.

"Individuals driving down 3A for years have called in to complain about an odor that makes it unbreathable," she said.

As CHL owner Paul Barry continues his fight to expand CHL by 27.5 acres, town officials appear to be forming a stand against the landfill.

Selectman Chair Merle Brown said to his board members at the meeting Thursday, "we want to work together on this."

The conservation commission also hopes to resume restoration and replication work with Barry on damaged wetlands in the adjacent Trustees land. Several hearings have been held over the last 1-1/2 years and the Commission is drafting a letter with CDM which would require Barry to file a notice of intent.

Conservation Chairman Roseanne McMorris said, "I think we're going to get back on track with that (restoration) in August. There are only a few areas that need to be worked out."

White wouldn't say she wanted to see the dump closed altogether, but she's opposed to expansion and feels the current site is full.

"That water (Lily Pond) is a very important aspect of the town's health and well-being," she said. "We are not waiting for hazardous waste dumps to appear to ruin the water supply. If the landfill accepts solid waste from anywhere, all of the problems in the early 80's will be greater in the 90's."

In addition to requesting a doubling of CHL's size, Barry has petitioned the town in his "global settlement" to agree "to accept non-municipal solid waste in Area V to include C&D waste and other waste agreeable to the town". Barry wants to triple the total amount of debris allowed into the dump per day, but offered to pay higher tipping fees. DEP guidelines are fuzzy for private landfills and Mariner calls to the department did not illicit a response.

In response to Barry's request for town "parties to agree on an appropriate level of financial assurance" in event of closure and post closure and current "access and hours of operation," S.A.F.E. activist John McNabb pointed out, "Regulation of current operations should not be subject to negotiation. CHL should be required to follow state and local laws and regulations."

Written, mailed comments on the site assessment filed by CHL are being accepted through July 24 by state Environmental Secretary Trudy Coxe at 100 Cambridge St., Rm. 2000, Boston, MA. 02202. Copies of the CSA are available for review at the Board of Health office at Town Hall.

Tennis courts are done

Selectman Michael H. Sullivan reported this week that the tennis courts at Milliken Field are complete.

"All nets are up, the courts are complete and they look great," he said.

He warned however that the courts are not for in-line skating (Rollerblading™).

"A lot of money has been spent and we'd really appreciate it if people do not use the courts for anything but tennis," Sullivan said.

He explained that he didn't think the skaters realized they might do harm to the surfaces.

Selectman Peter Pratt asked that police take notice because the in-line skating "can do great damage."

Refurbishing the old courts and adding two new ones is part of the high school athletic field project approved by the 1994 annual town meeting and supported through a debt-exclusion Prop. 2-1/2 override last year.

Cohasset's Red Lion Inn to be sold and renovated

By Charlene Vandini
Mariner staff

The Red Lion Inn is about to be sold, and major renovations are planned for the Cohasset Village landmark. But specifics on the project are a carefully guarded secret at this point in the transaction.

At their meeting last week, selectmen approved the liquor and innholder's license transfers from 1704 Inn Ltd. to Red Lion Inn of Cohasset, Inc. Arthur G. Smith of Weston owns 100 per cent of the stock in the latter corporation.

On Tuesday, after several telephone calls to his Boston office, Smith said, through his secretary, that he was "unavailable to comment" on his plans for the inn.

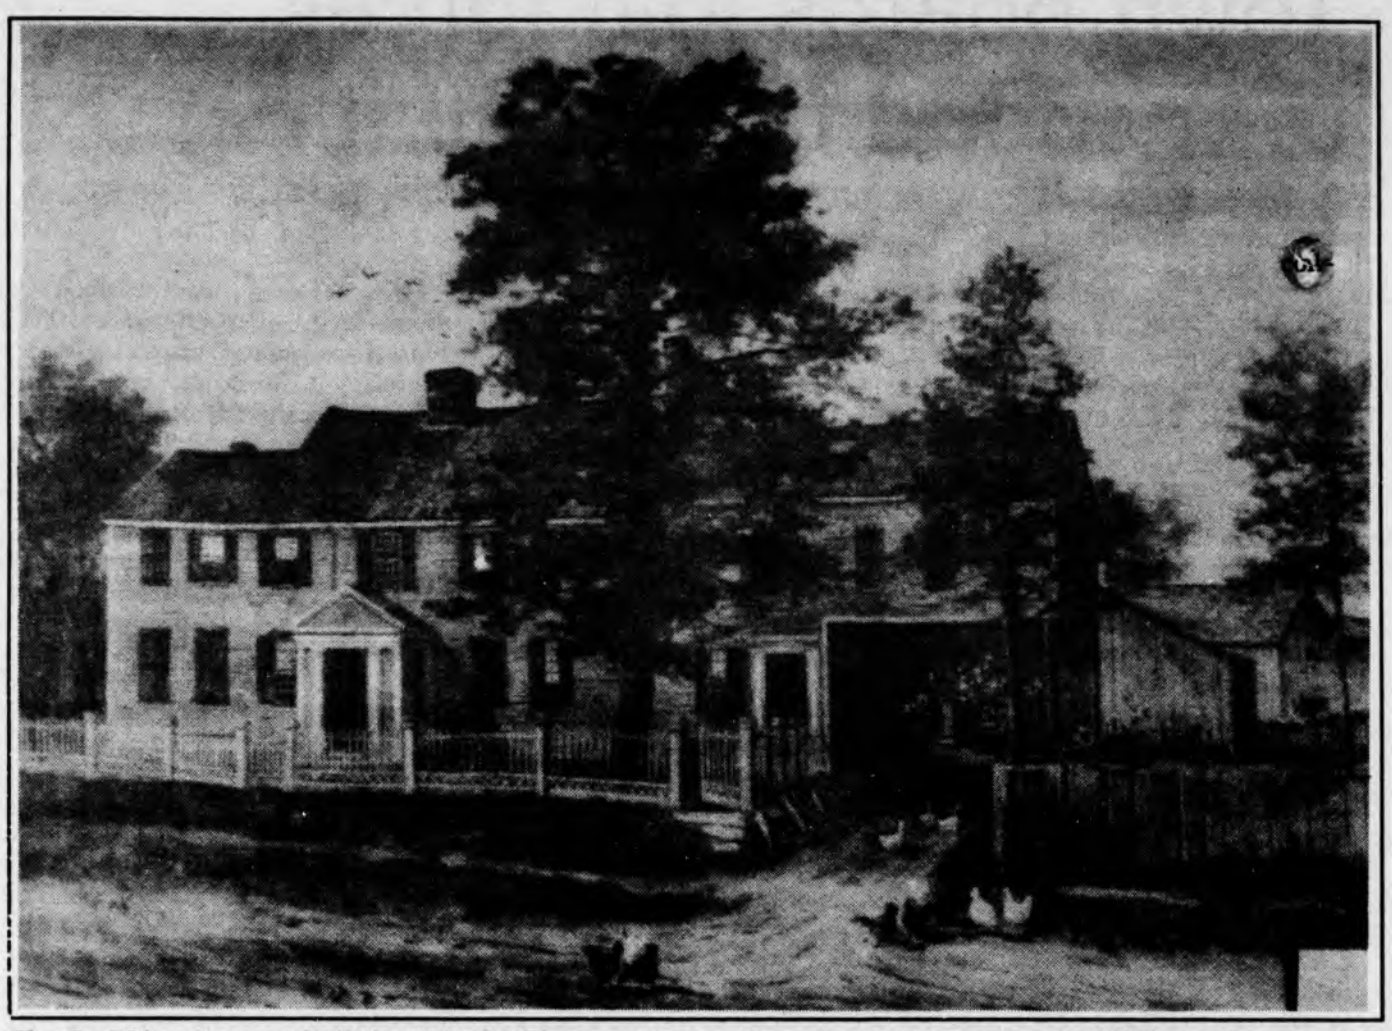
Smith's attorney John McLaughlin said he had not been authorized to comment on his client's proposal beyond his statements to selectmen that Smith plans to spend between $150,000 and $200,000 to improve and remodel the building.

Curtis Smalzel, one of the inn's present owners, also declined comment but did disclose that the sale is likely to be concluded next month.

However rumors are circulating around town that the Red Lion Inn will be modernized and converted to a bed-and-breakfast.

Whatever the plans for the future owners, it will be one more change in the almost 300-year history of the South Main Street property.

According to local historian David Wadsworth, in 1704, Thomas James built a large colonial house on the site. His grandson Christopher converted it to the original Red Lion Inn about a half-century later. The property stayed in the James family until Eleazer James died in October, 1871.



The Red Lion Inn was built in 1704 by Thomas James. James' grandson converted it to an inn one-half century later. (Photo courtesy of the Cohasset Historical Society)

Its location on a coastal stage coach route that ran between Hingham and Scituate made it a suitable stop to refresh travellers and horses. Wadsworth said the inn changed names several times during this period, and was once called the Norfolk House. It advertised itself as providing "food, drink, and lodging for man and beast."

He added that about 30 years ago, the advertisement was tested when "someone showed up with a horse" and the manager did indeed find a place to stable the animal.

Sometime after the Civil War, the building underwent a major change of appearance when the upper floors were added.

Long-time resident and historian Noel Ripley said the original brick and clay insulation is still visible in portions of the building. He also noted that the location of the train station nearby contributed to the commercial development of Cohasset Village in the later part of the 19th century. Prior to that, most commercial activity was centered around the harbor.

In addition to the restaurant and lounge, the inn has approximately 15 rooms, about half of them with private baths, said Judy Keeler, presently a manager at there. The rooms vary in size, from some large enough to provide sitting and sleeping areas, to smaller quarters large enough for a bed and chest of drawers.

She also noted that the inn's third floor—the Captain's Quarters—is very spacious, and at one time housed the innkeeper and his family.

Hingham attorney Greg Sullivan, who is also representing Arthur Smith, said the back taxes and delinquent water and sewer charges will be paid by the seller, from the proceeds of the sale. Sullivan would not disclose the purchase price.

According to the treasurer's office, unpaid 1995 taxes amount to almost $21,000 and the sewer charges due are $13,005, as of June 28. For 1992 through 1994, a total of $47,837.82 is due to satisfy real estate taxes, interest, and water and sewer liens.

The inn has an assessed valuation of $501,800.

Correction is noted

Due to incorrect information supplied by police in Hingham, the July 4 garage fire occurred at 137 Hull Street, at property owned by Samuel Esposito. Hingham police originally gave the address for the fire, to which Hingham firefighters responded for mutual aid, at the Louis Esposito address of 167 Hull Street.

After initial investigation, Cohasset Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said this week the fire is believed may have been caused by children setting off fireworks near to garage.

The fire caused minor damage to the garage, and was extinguished in less than 10 minutes, Lincoln said.

Federal funds, eel grass tangle dredging picture

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner Staff

It will be a difficult summer for Cohasset mariners trying to navigate through a heavily silted harbor, and the badly needed harbor dredging initially slated for the fall has been pushed back again.

According to Selectman Peter Pratt, a dredging coordinator for the town, both state and local funding for the project is in place, but the federal funds which will cover the lion's share of the dredging costs is not yet in line.

Complicating matters further, Pratt explained that redefining the area of federal navigation will be required before and federal dredging can occur and can only be done through an Act of Congress.

Pratt said that while the state and town portion to be dredged is only about 7,000 cubic yards, the federal channel makes up between 65,000 and 90,000 cubic yards.

The state has come up with $300,000 for the project which Pratt now estimates will cost less than first predicted. Pratt also noted that the town has come up with its 25 percent local match for the dredging and has covered the costs, about $40,000 for engineering studies undertaken by Nucci Vine Associates of Newburyport.

Two weeks ago, selectmen voted to appropriate another $9,800 to cover the costs of further engineering work to be done including additional sediment sampling of town and state harbor areas and the study of an eel grass bed located within the federal channel.

The $5,000 eel grass survey is important especially to Massachusetts Coastal Zone Management, said Pratt who noted that this marine vegetation is the spawning ground for several migrating fish species and also shelters shell fish.

"It is an important part of the marine eco system," Pratt said. The study will help to determine the size, rate of growth and the characteristics of the bed.

The Army Corps of Engineers, the government agency responsible for dredging the federal channel was supposed to do the study in June, but faced with several other potential delays, Pratt said the town decided to take the study into its own hands. Pratt pointed out that the existence of the eel grass beds indicates good water quality in the harbor and said that Nucci Vine's studies gave the silt material to be dredged a clean bill of health making ocean disposal possible.

Like wetlands, protected by local and state laws, if the eel grass beds are altered or removed during the federal channel dredging they will have to be replicated elsewhere said Pratt, who noted that the whole eel grass issue brings up some jurisdictional problems.

For the most part, Pratt said there has been great cooperation between local and state officials.

"We rely on our own sophisticated network of Cohasset boat owners with political, legal, engineering and regulatory experience."

On the federal level, Pratt said, "We couldn't be one tenth the way along without Gerry Studds and his office."

Still, it is at the federal level that financing and project scheduling has been delayed. Federal funding for dredging is not included in this fiscal year budget but Pratt hopes that in working with Congressman Studds and the Army Corps that efforts can be made for federal fiscal reprogramming by taking the money from another project for the year beginning Oct. 1.

According to Pratt, the Act of Congress to redefine the area of federal navigation will be introduced in the U.S Senate early in the fall through the efforts of Massachusetts Senators Edward Kennedy and John Kerry. Pratt said he hopes to have the dredging work done in the winter or the spring of 1996.

"The town will be poorly served if it has to be done in the summer," he said.

There is a sense of urgency behind all of these small harbor dredging projects as Studds and other legislators feel that Republican control in the house and senate will lead to big budget cuts for the federal small harbor programs.

In Cohasset, the urgency comes from the great need for dredging. The Coast Guard stationed at Point Allerton in Hull no longer consider Cohasset a safe harbor and town officials noted that commercial and recreational boaters are no longer able to pass through the outer channel within one hour of low tide.

"Any off shore storm of any significance will [illegible]e enough sediment to block the harbor entirely," Pratt said.

In the meantime, Pratt said the town will continue to talk and work with the Weld administration and the federal players to get a dredging schedule in place, and go for the federal funds.

There is frustration in the delays said Pratt who noted that there is a "horrible disconnect between the needs of Cohasset and the Government's time table."

Youth dance is supported

Despite the fact the use may not be the intent of the original variance issued by the zoning board nearly 25 years ago to operate the non-profit Swim Center off Sohier Street, selectmen gave the go ahead for a youth dance to be held there July 28.

They were enthusiastic about the fund-raiser because it would be over by 10:30 p.m. and would be restricted to members only. Organizer Scott Theriault said neighbors of the Swim Club would be contacted about the dance.

"It's a good way to raise money and give kids something to do," said Theriault.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby noted that the Music Circus is allowed to be open until 11 p.m.

"I don't think this will be any more offensive to the neighbors," she said.

Immediately after Theriault's presentation, Sohier Street resident Robert Davenport made a point of signing a letter to be distributed to the neighbors to show he did not object to the dance.

Selectman Peter Pratt asked the organizers to be considerate of the abutters so there wouldn't be any complaints.

"Think about the noise at the lot line," he said.

by Sallyann Chatterton

Jessica Jenkins is in Cohasset's sister town of Souppes sur Loing, visiting with the Parmelan family. As many of you know, the Parmelans have been to Cohasset before and are now returning the pleasure by having Jessica stay with them. You may be sure that the two daughters, Marine and Anne Laure, are showing Jessica all of the sights.

Hopefully we will get a complete report upon her return. In the meantime, have fun, Jessica!

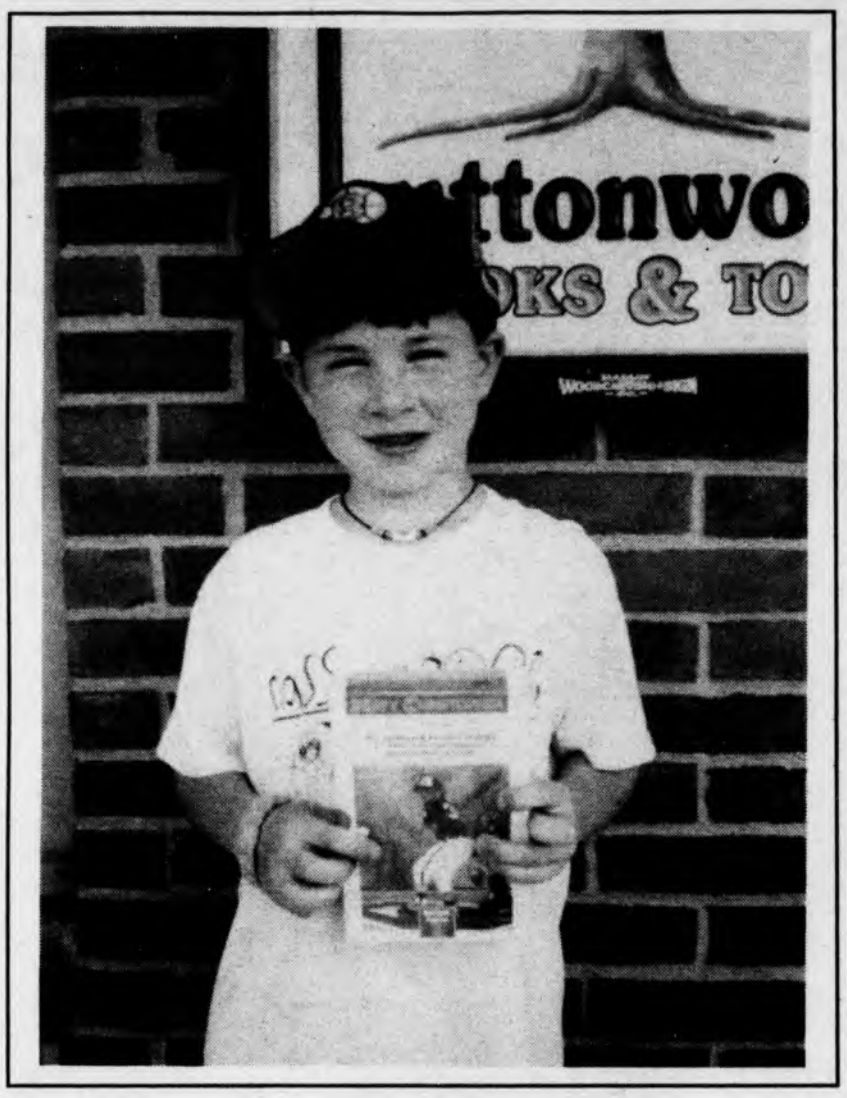
There are more travelers to tell you about, this time in the form of AFS news. Mike Kasameyer, son of Judy and Rob Kasameyer of Pond St., is participating in an AFS Team Mission to Hong Kong and mainland China for the next three weeks.

Kathy, David, Kendra and Karyn Gray are all in Norway visiting their AFSer, Sondre Hauland, who spent the school year here in Cohasset in 1993-94.

Lizzie Kuhn informs us that AFS is still looking for host families for students from a variety of countries who are scheduled to arrive in mid-August. They are looking for families who are interested in hosting for the year, but this year they are also in need of families for short-term hosting, either for three weeks through Labor Day or mid-August through October. If anyone would like more information on hosting or on the students who are available, please give Lizzie a call at 383-0580.

Marnie DeMichele, the daughter of Don and Susan DeMichele of 264 Jerusalem Rd., was the recipient of the Dean's Award for Academic Excellence during the spring semester at Colgate University, where she is a member of the Class of 1998. She was nominated to Phi Eta Sigma, a National Honor Society. Marnie is a 1994 CHS grad.

Dave Terry is one happy man these days, and is proof-positive that persistence wins out. After trying his luck for three and a half years fishing at Cunningham Bridge, Dave landed himself a 34-1/2-inch striper! Now that is exciting! Yummy to eat, too!



Cohasset's Brendon Barrett displays his cent of Matt Christopher baseball books that he won in a recent drawing at Buttonwood Books & Toys. Congratulations, Brendon!

Of course, there are frustrating fish stories, too. Take Roger Pompeo who was on a boat with his son-in-law, Jeff, and nephew, Troy. While everyone else caught huge stripers, Roger only managed to get a pollock! Next time, Rog. . . .

Delicious news to report — the Beechwood Congregational Church is holding a ham and bean supper Saturday, July 15, at 6:30 p.m. at the church. They are also going to have big band recordings after coffee and dessert. What fun! The tickets are $5.99 for adults and $2.99 for children. You can buy your tickets in advance from any church member or by calling 383-1298. Have fun!

Mr. and Mrs. Steve Sinopoli are pleased to announce the birth of their son, Michael Vincent Sinopoli, born May 24, weighing eight pounds, eight ounces. He was 21 inches long at birth. Everyone is doing fine. Michael joins his sister, Monica, who is now 21 months old. Steve tells us that Michael's first Northeastern University event should be a football game in the fall, followed by hockey and hoop in the winter — sounds like everyone is in for a wonderful time! Enjoy!

Julienne R. Guemere, daughter of Kathleen Guemere of Cohasset and Larry Guemere of Boston, has been given the Hartwick College Women's Club Scholarship and has been named a John Christopher Hartwick Music Scholar at the college. Julienne received the awards during the College's annual Honors Day Convocation, and we applaud her!

Peter Ferenz, son of Richard and Virginia Ferenz, was one of 208 seniors who graduated from the Loomis Chaffee School, Windsor, Conn. Peter will matriculate at Vassar College.

Hope Gaston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Gaston III, has received her diploma at the 116th Commencement of Holderness School in Plymouth, New Hampshire, and will enter the freshman class at Bates College in the fall. Hope was also named to the school's high honor roll for both the winter and spring semesters.

Franklin & Marshall College reports that Robert Edward Whittaker, a government major, was among the 407 seniors who received bachelor of arts degrees recently. Robert is the son of Barbara Moore and the late William Whittaker.

Hats off to Lori Gallant, who achieved dean's list status for the spring, 1995 semester at Westfield State College. Lori's major is psychology.

That's the news for this week. How has your summer been so far? Have you got any news? Give me a call!

Stepping up to the plate

As you enjoy a Cohasset summer, please take a moment to consider serving on an appointed town committee.

This lovely town didn't get this way purely by luck or accident.

Yes, Cohasset is blessed with a great natural location. That drive along Atlantic Avenue and Jerusalem Road rivals any coast road anywhere.

And it's no surprise to us that Cohasset Common and Village have been the centerpiece for two major motion pictures and several commercials. They are the stuff that people in other parts of the country can only dream about.

But not having to worry about a fast-food restaurant popping up on your residential block or wetlands being wiped out or if the police or firefighters will have a new contract — is the result of thoughtful decisions made by some of your neighbors serving on volunteer boards.

These committees help keep the wheels of Cohasset government moving.

It's hard work with no pay but serving your town can also be rewarding and fun.

What you see now in Cohasset is the result of someone or some group that cared about this town, which has been blessed with many talented citizens throughout its history.

Right now selectmen are looking for volunteers to serve on the Conservation Commission, Disabilities Commission, Cohasset Common Historic District Commission, and the Water Resources Protection, Personnel, and Call-Firefighters committees.

Openings on other committees can occur at any time. So why not step up to the plate and call the selectmen's office at 383-9900 to offer your services.

This is as good a time as any, to give something back to the place you're proud to call home.

To the Editor:

It was 11:05 p.m. June 23, Friday night. With a huge blue flash and deafening crash an enormous maple tree (109 inch circumference) fell over onto Beach Street, ripping out wires, exploding a transformer, plunging the street into darkness.

Within minutes the ambulance and fire trucks and several police cars arrived, their flashing lights showing a foggy, eerie scene. Next came an Eastern Utilities bucket truck with handy chain saw and the Cohasset Tree and Park Department with more chain saws. All within minutes. It was gratifying to witness the quick response. Soon a second Eastern Utilities truck arrived. Now two chain saws from above were working on this great tree, that was partially hanging in the wires across the street, our tree and park men working with them to clear the huge branches from below.

Soon the highway department sent a front loader to push the enormous trunk off the road.

It was heartening to see all these people working so efficiently together in the middle of the night. Monday, Tony, Bobby and Herbie from Peter's Tree and Park department were back clearing up the branches and great logs, leaving the street better than before. The grass they planted where the trunk had been, is already coming up.

A great Thank You to the Cohasset Tree and Park Department, the Highway Department and Eastern Utilities for all the work and cooperation with one another. And thank God no one was hurt by this tree's demise.

Comments on landfill filing sought

To the Editor:

Once again it is time to move to the typewriters and keyboards, pen and stationery! The perennial poor neighbor Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) is back. The landfill has a Comprehensive Site Assessment (CSA) summarizing its arguments why a 27.5 acre expansion of its area for trash dumping is a great idea. And we've got until July 24 to respond!

It seems the permitting process is for those with the money to keep applying. There is big money behind this expansion. This facility has filed a half dozen major documents over the past five to six years — each has been rejected by the state environmental secretary as inadequate — each successive issue has raised more negative comment from a distrustful public. We have attacked the expansion on need, on economics, on traffic impacts, on financial assurance and most importantly on safety issues relating to its threat to Lily Pond, our water supply.

The completion of a CSA, if approved, will mark the end to the first and most important round of permits. Our fight has delayed this project for years and if we demonstrate intense opposition at this point we can kill it. We will give the secretary Trudy Coxe further pause to consider our side. The impacts are real and the threat of contaminated groundwater and odors and traffic are real. Everyone in Cohasset is affected — everyone needs to take a minute and voice his or her opinion. Send your comment before July 24 to Secretary Trudy Coxe, 100 Cambridge St., Boston, 02202, attn. MEPA Unit File 7223.

The purpose of the MEPA process is fact-finding and the facts are clear: the present site has problems; is impacting the surrounding habitat; is leaking leachate into conservation land and smells bad. CHL is only now (after 10 years) backing into agreement on these points and contends that the new expansion will make these problems go away and the dump will become an asset for the town.

We must continue to fight for our rights. Read the CSA (there are copies at the Hull, Hingham and Cohasset Health Departments, Cohasset Town Hall and the library), you'll find newly re-hashed arguments, not new information. Attend the public meeting July 23 at the town hall. This process requires a letter of comment to the Secretary of Environmental Affairs in Boston, speak out and ask for a rejection of the CSA!

Service group shares introductory poem

To the Editor:

Cohasset has many reasons to be proud of its town this summer. In Appalachia, we saw 82 reasons, when 82 high school students, college C.I.T.s, and adult advisors travelled two days each way, to work five long, hot days repairing homes for needy families. At our living quarters, a local elementary school where we slept on the gym floor, Cohasset joined other service groups from Pennsylvania, Connecticut and Ohio.

To introduce ourselves and our town, Cohasset students read the following verse, which we'd like to share with all the people who generously supported our wonderful kids in their ASP project.

Sue McNamara
150 Beach St.

We are the merry band from Cohasset-by-the-Sea,
Who've travelled from New England to work for A.S.P.
We belong to different churches, but on this we do agree,
Our goal's the same, to work for A.S.P.!

For 6 years now, Cohasset's been Appalachia bound,
Thanks to Rev. Gary Ritts, who brought the message to town.
Each year our ranks have swelled, and now we're 82 strong.
3 buses, 12 vans moved the whole group along!

6 a.m. Saturday, 3 groups left, excitement all around.
To Leslie, Letcher & Perry, all Kentucky bound.

In Sept. our planning starts, to raise a tremendous sum.
Soon the churches, schools, and town know that A.S.P.'s begun.
We've worked as Servants for Hire, washed a car or few,
Baked pies, sold A.S.P. stock, to make this wish come true.

With village green and sandy beaches, our town a rare beauty boasts.
Between Boston and Cape Cod, Cohasset hugs the coast.
This "long rocky place," indians and Puritans called home.
From its safe harbors, trading ships did roam.

When George and his taxes incited the colonists to war,
Under our church pulpit, Cohasset rebels their weapons did store.
In 1773, angry rebellion filled the air,
So Cohasset boys, in Indian garb, headed for old Boston pier.

They whooped and hollered, tossed barrels into the sea,
Creating the event known as the Boston Tea Par-ty!
Poets and presidents were easily drawn to our shore,
Thoreau, Adams, Kennedy and more.

Now our town's won fame, of the 20th century kind,
When our classic village green, Hollywood did find.
That green, where the old church is standing,
Became Eastwick for witches, and "Housesitters" Dobb's Landing!

From our seaside home, to these mountains so fair,
We've come with high spirits, eager to share.
With open hearts and ready hands, we will be,
One in spirit, with our family of A.S.P.

But our Odyssey begins again, at week's end
In taking A.S.P.'s gift back home to our friends.

SAFE to hold public hearing July 23

SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion) will hold a public hearing July 23 to hear public comments on the proposed expansion of the Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill.

The public hearing will be held at 7:30 p.m. Sunday, July 23, in Trueblood Hall at the Unitarian Parish House, 23 North Main St.

The specific focus of the hearing will be the Comprehensive Site Assessment (CSA) on the existing landfill which CHL has recently filed with the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs (EOEA).

Interested persons have until 5 p.m. Monday, July 24, to submit written comments on the CSA to EOEA

Daytripping

by Laura Ricketson Doherty

Known worldwide as the summer home for one of Boston's most important cultural institutions, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Tanglewood can be the focus of a most pleasurable daytrip.

The Saturday morning open rehearsals for Sunday's program are our special favorites. Admittedly, the three-hour journey may seem long for daytripping. But, we have discovered that there are many others like us, who leave at the crack of dawn in order to arrive on time.

The ride up through the rolling green hills of the Berkshires has its own special rewards. And, having parked the car in the open field, purchased and given our tickets to one of the many volunteers at the entrance gate, the first notes of that day's offering reassure us that the trip, as always, has been well worth it.

One of the most outstanding features of the rehearsals is the relaxed atmosphere. Where else can you watch Sejii Ozawa conduct Mozart in a T-shirt? And, as occurred at last Saturday's concert, the musicians and conductor appear much more human.

For instance, during an especially demanding piano concerto, one of the many resident birds suddenly became inspired and warbled along with the music. Very loudly. So much so that the maestro, at one point, turned and nodded in acknowledgment.

The audience loved it. It was fun to watch dedicated concert lovers chuckling in the midst of such serious music.

One member of the audience describes Tanglewood as an experience of "total relaxation in a private, restful setting." Saturday mornings can also be a learning experience. Because they are rehearsals, they provide the chance to watch music in the making. Terms that we've all heard at one time or another become meaningful. Such as when Ozawa calls out crescendo and the sound of the music swells around us.

If you listen carefully, you can hear each conductor singing to show how he wants the music to sound. Watching him as he painstakingly leads his musicians over and over a few notes until they are perfect, adds to your appreciation of the music.

All kinds of people enjoy Tanglewood. As evidenced by the logos on their shirts, they represent a wide range of age and experience. Last Saturday, I saw the following: Wimbledon Tennis Championship, Men Dancing, We Love Grandpa, Take Care Of The Earth And Each Other, So Many Books, So Little Time.

Often there will be groups of four generations enjoying the music together. Some prefer to sit in the shed, others, especially if the weather is good, sit on the lawn, outside. Although there are many large shade trees, it's always good to bring protection from the sun.

After the concert is over, there is so much to see and do on the estate grounds that we often find ourselves staying the whole day. Two cafeterias are available for refreshments or you can bring a picnic basket. It's fun to watch how others arrange this. Some bring antique quilts, old wicker baskets, glass goblets and fine china. Others, like the couple in front of us Saturday, share a sweatshirt.

A tour of the 200 acres is offered at the visitor's center. I would advise checking for departure time because for some reason when we went our guide was missing. As it happened, another volunteer offered to help us out and he was most knowledgeable.

Ronald Winter is from Providence, R.I., but gives his Saturdays to Tanglewood where he has been going for more than 20 years. His enthusiasm was contagious.

"Listen to how the music wafts out at you from every nook and cranny," he advised as we walked past the many buildings used for rehearsals.

There's a long history to Tanglewood and Winter was most generous in sharing it. For instance, I'd always wondered how the shed was named. It seems that the architect, Eliel Saarinen, who was selected in 1937 to design the concert hall, proposed a very elaborate design which was well beyond budget. When the trustees refused, he withdrew, telling them they would have "just a shed." The building was erected and remains with modifications to this day.

The emphasis on acoustics so important in planning each building is especially evident in the new Sejii Ozawa Hall just opened last year. Even the seats have openings to provide for the flow of music. Designed on three levels sort of like a shoebox in shape, it provides in addition to traditional seating, a unique opportunity to sit behind the stage and watch the soloists as they play.

Many visitors ask about the little red house across from the estate. This is a replica of the home lived in by Nathaniel Hawthorne when he lived on the grounds and wrote The House of The Seven Gables and Tanglewood Tales.

One of my favorite areas is the formal gardens. Quiet and elegant, they overlook the Stockbridge Bowl (Lake Nahkeenac). The new analemmatic sundial is fun but when you stand on it and watch where your shadow falls, remember the time of day is Eastern standard time so it will be one hour earlier. This always provokes much discussion among visitors.

The gardens are located near the visitor's center. Once the summer home of the Tappan family of Boston, the lower floor is now open to visitors. In one room is a fascinating exhibit of Sejii Ozawa from the time he was a child in China.

Whether you go for a day or a week, discover the magic of Tanglewood. The season has now been extended through Sept. 4 and includes a variety of music. For further information, call (617) 266-1492.

Republicans target new Title V regulations

By Mark Leccese
State House bureau

A group of Republican state senators has presented Gov. William Weld with proposed changes in the new Title V septic system regulations, and if the governor and his environmental officials won't adopt the senators' proposals, they will file them as legislation.

"We're going to ask them to make the changes regulatorily," said Sen. Bruce Tarr, R-Gloucester.

Although the House was breaking for its summer recess, making the chances of immediate passage of any new bill unlikely, Tarr said, "I'm not so sure we couldn't schedule a special House session in the summer to deal with this."

"This issue isn't going away," he said. "Often, with new regulations, the controversy settles down, but that isn't happening with Title V."

According to Tarr, the senators' proposal would dramatically redraft the regulations, place a cap of how much property owners could be required to spend, and give town meetings final approval if a local board of health tries to adopt stricter regulations.

Both the governor's office and officials of the Department of Environmental Protection said they would wait to see the proposal — which was being drafted by Tarr, Wakefield Sen. Richard Tisei and Weymouth Sen. Robert Hedlund — before reacting.

"We can't really comment on it, because we haven't seen it," said DEP spokeswoman Te Leone. "Right now, we're concentrating on doing things we announced two weeks ago and on gathering information."

The DEP, along with Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci, recently announced some tinkering with the Title V regulations. In addition, DEP commissioner David Struhs has his department researching and preparing a report on the problems and successes of the first three months of the new Title V regulations, which were implemented March 31.

"The governor is open to listening to any proposal that would relieve the financial burden the new Title V regulations gave placed on homeowners," said Pam Jonah, a Weld spokeswoman.

"He's eager to review the results of commissioner Struhs fact-finding mission," Jonah added. "The governor will consider further measures at that time."

The proposal developed by Senators Tarr, Tisei and Hedlund has three major components, Tarr said:

• Creation of a new inspection category other than the "pass," "fail" and "conditional pass" categories that now exist. The new category would be "non-complying but functioning," Tarr said.

Inspections under the regulations would be changed to look only for chemical contamination, visible cracks or ruptures in the system, and evidence of contamination of nearby groundwater or well water.

The proposal would change the regulations "in a major way," Tarr said. "We'd only be looking for proof that a septic system isn't polluting."

• Limit to 10 percent of the value of the property the cost of repair or replacement of septic systems that fail inspection.

"No regulation is valid unless people can afford to comply with it. We feel we're making the regulations stronger by adding the affordability quotient," Tarr said.

If a local board of health wanted to require a repair or replacement that would cost more than 10 percent of the value of a homeowner's property, approval would have to be given by the DEP.

• Giving town meetings approval power if local boards of health want to impose septic system regulations tougher than the state's regulations.

Tarr added that he does not favor a bill filed by Rep. Colleen Garry, D-Dracut, that would suspend the implementation of the new Title V regulations for more than a year, since homeowners and mortgage lenders would still be "anxious and uncertain" about what would happen after the year is up.

Secretary Trudy Coxe.

"We are holding this hearing to give the residents of Cohasset a chance to speak out in person against this expansion and about their many concerns with the existing Cohasset Heights landfill," said Linda Keller, president of SAFE.

"Both SAFE and the Cohasset Board of Selectmen have requested that Secretary Coxe hold a public hearing on the CSA," said John McNabb, vice-president of SAFE. "So far, we have not received any response to these requests.

"Hundreds of Cohasset residents have written comments about the five environmental impact reports for this proposed expansion," Keller said. "These earlier reports were all rejected, because they were inadequate but also because so many of us spoke out against it.

"We have invited Secretary Trudy Coxe and the new Commissioner of the Department of Environmental Protection, David Struhs, to attend," said McNabb. "We hope and expect that state officials will attend to hear the concerns of Cohasset residents.

"This hearing will be an invaluable opportunity for Cohasset residents to speak out about this potential threat to our water supply."

Cohasset High School Council report

The Cohasset High School Council met Tuesday, May 30. New members Laura Slotnick, Mary Babaian, Victoria Hurley and Jo Anne Grew were welcomed, while departing members Connie Afshar, Linda Keller, Scott Moe and Maura Devin were thanked for their two years spent on the Council.

The Council discussed the earlier meeting between the joint school Councils, school administrations and school committee members. The Council reviewed a synopsis of that meeting and reiterated its strong commitment to improving and enhancing communications between these various groups.

The Council continued its discussion over the possible hiring of a part-time adjustment counselor for Cohasset High School. The Cohasset High School student handbook was reviewed by the Council and the necessary revisions and additions were made. The Council was informed there is still uncertainty over how the MIAA rules will impact charter schools and home-schooled students.

The new school vacation calendar for the 1995/96 academic year was further discussed by the Council. Of particular concern was how this new calendar would impact students committed to school trips abroad and, the related issue, of a possible extended timetable for students to complete their makeup work. Also discussed was the charter of the existing Student Council at CHS. Discussion centered on the possibility it might better serve the students of CHS if it became a student government body.

The next meeting of the CHS School Council will be Tuesday, June 13, at 7 p.m., in the Cohasset High School library. The Council will meet with Alicia Shea, director of student services. The Council will also be finalizing its goals for the 1995/96 academic year. The CHS Council is committed to enhancing communications between Cohasset High School, the School Committee, parents, students and the community at large. The Council meetings are open to the public.

Permanent solution to water problems in sight

sioners enacted an outdoor watering ban from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m.

The commissioners and officials from Cohasset Water Services were scheduled to meet yesterday (July 12) to discuss possibly easing the ban to allow hand-held watering during certain hours and to set a fine structure for violators. The meeting was held after the Cohasset Mariner went to press.

Cohan said any changes to the water ban would be announced in the newspapers, on cable Channel 3, and on the signs installed around town.

Water commissioners enacted the outdoor watering ban last week following a letter from Health Agent Joseph Godzik saying the lack of water in 30-to-50 homes was in violation of the state sanitary code and could result in those homes being temporarily condemned.

John Bocchino, project manager with Cohasset Water Services, said once water usage was limited, water pressure on Rust Way, for example, was 50 pounds per square inch.

"We saw some improvement in the system," Bocchino said.

Selectman Peter Pratt said police knocked on the doors of 12-to-14 homes over the weekend and asked the residents to have their outdoor watering systems shut down.

Selectmen Martha Gjesteby and Michael H. Sullivan both asked if the ban could be eased slightly to allow some outdoor watering with hand-held hoses in the early morning or evening hours.

Gjesteby said some residents are having to get up at 5:30 a.m. to water their gardens.

Pratt praised Town Counsel Richard Henderson for his work in preparing a draft of water rules and regulations which was to be considered at the water commissioners' meeting last night.

Pratt, who said the public health and fire-suppression capabilities in the affected area of town are primary concerns, explained that fines could be followed up with criminal complaints if necessary.

Unlike other towns, Cohasset's water problems are not related to supply which comes from Lily Pond — but the the town's distribution system.

At October's special town meeting, voters authorized borrowing of about $2.5 million to upgrade and repair the town's water distribution system and to remeter the town.

Cohasset Water Services, which has a three-year contract to run the water department is a joint venture of Peabody-based Weston & Sampson Services, Inc. and Pennichuck Water Services Company of Nashua, New Hampshire.

Last year dozens of angry residents, demanding solutions to the lack of water pressure in their homes, packed a joint meeting of water commissioners and town health and safety officials.

Selectmen had the water department audited and monitored but stopped short of taking over the water commission, which is an elected board.

This year, citizens' reaction was calmer.

As of Monday (July 10), selectmen had received several calls and two letters about easing the ban to allow watering by hand-held hose.

Public hearing on boat yard fate

State waterways license rules require all structures and piers be licensed. Hanney filed an application to license the structures on the harbor-front site, a process that requires state environmental review.

The DEP will conduct the July 18 hearing to receive information to be used in its decision on whether to grant a Waterways License. The Department will consider all written comments on Hanney's application within 30 days of the July 15 hearing "notification date."

Comments should be addressed to DEP, Division of Wetlands and Waterways, One Winter Street, 8th Floor, Boston, 02108. Attn. Waterways Program Chief.

Commercial fishermen are concerned that their livelihoods will be adversely affected without a boat yard in Cohasset Harbor. Hanney is trying to evict the Mill River Marine Railway, owned and operated by Frank Carey at the site for more than 2-1/2 decades.

Carey's attorney Peter Eely of Quincy said this week that the state will determine if Hanney's application will be accepted under the state's amnesty from Massachusetts General Law Chapter 91 — the state's revised regulations which allow private waterfront structures, exisitng docks, sea walls or other structures to be licensed at a minimal cost.

At a hearing at the site in July 1994, about 50 interested citizens met with state and local officials to express their concern over the possible loss of the boat yard.

People urged to take the plunge

preservation is important to you, then how about getting involved? The Cohasset Common Historic District Commission has a vacancy for a licensed Realtor.

The Call-Firefighters Committee needs three citizens, two firefighters (one call, one permanent) to help determine how best to incorporate permanent and call firefighters into the town's public safety picture.

The personnel committee, which helps negotiate contracts and sets policy for town employees, also needs another member.

And the water resources protection committee could sure use an individual who would like to get involved in the important task of mapping and protecting the town's watershed and looking to work with neighboring towns for a joint plan.

For more information about serving on a town board, call the selectmen's office at 383-9900 or stop by their office which is on the second floor at town hall.

Wilson House open for season

The Cohasset Historical Society's Capt. John Wilson House, an 1810 sea captain's home, is open for the summer season. Located on Elm St., Cohasset Center, the Wilson House will be staffed each afternoon except Mondays by qualified young people trained to act as docents. The hours are 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. through Labor Day.

The early home, retaining many of the features of the original house, features on its first floor a representation of an early-20th-century tea house, a role in which it served during the decade of the 1920's, before becoming the Historical Society's first museum.

The second floor features artifacts characteristic of an early Cohasset home, most of which were donated to the Historical Society from other early homes in the town.

Built by housewright David Nichols and sold to Capt. John Wilson for $475, the Federal-style home remained in the Wilson family until 1912, when it was sold to Cohasset businessman William Hamilton McGaw. From then until 1936, when the house was given to the Historical Society by McGaw, it saw several different uses, including the "Mayfair Tea House." The ambiance of an early-20th-century tea room is replicated in this summer's first-floor setting.

The numerous artifacts upstairs in the house, which come from the Society's extensive collection, illustrate aspects of Cohasset life during the formative years of the town.

Admission to the Capt. Wilson House and the the Society's Maritime Museum next door is free, although donations are gratefully accepted. For further information contact the Historical Society at 383-1434.

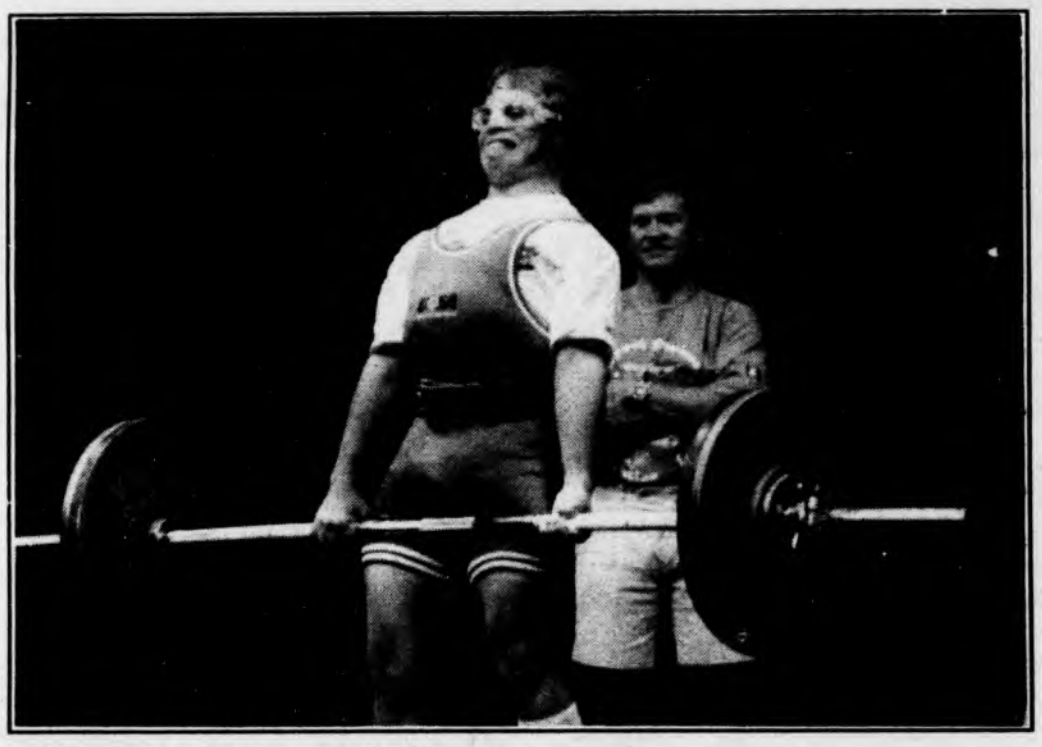
Nothnagle bulls way to gold medal

Congratulations to Jay Nothnagle who competed in powerlifting for Team Massachusetts at the Special Olympics World Games in New Haven, CT, from July 1-9. Jay came home with a fourth-place ribbon in bench press and a fourth in the deadlift, and his double combination lift total of 432.5 pounds brought him a coveted gold medal for his 132-pound weight class.

The World Games were spectacular in every way, from the Opening Ceremonies, where more than 70,000 people from 140 countries gathered to see the torch lit in the Yale Bowl, to the 21 individual venues, such as the Southern Connecticut State University Lyman Center, where 250 powerlifters competed, and Olympic Town, a private place just for the 7,200 athletes to relax and try new skills in a noncompetitive atmosphere. The four Massachusetts powerlifters will remember the roar of the huge crowds at the parade of athletes into the Yale Bowl, living in a dorm with new friends from Israel and Russia, fireworks and a clambake, eating lots of rice and beans, and visits from Arnold Schwarzenegger and the World Wrestling Federation wrestlers. It was truly a week of sport, spirit and splendor, never to be forgotten.



The Strain of Victory

Cohasset powerlifter Jay Nothnagle deadlifts 272.5 pounds at the World Special Olympic Games in Connecticut. His combined total of 482.5 pounds earned Nothnagle a gold medal in the 132-pound weight class.

Jay, 21, grew up in Cohasset and competes in Scituate Special Olympics and also attended Scituate High School's Special Needs Vocational program. He is an Eagle Scout and currently works at both the Super Stop and Shop in Cohasset and Road to Responsibility in Marshfield.

O'Neil leads softball squad to victory

Little League's District 8 has its first ever entry from Cohasset in the girls softball division. Cohasset acquitted itself well last Friday night by beating North Randolph 25-14.

Ten-year-old Maggie O'Neil pitched four solid innings of relief. She entered the game with the bases loaded and struck out the first two batters she faced to crush a North Randolph rally.

O'Neil's bases-loaded double in the first inning broke open the game for Cohasset which benefited from a young North Randolph pitching staff that threw with speed but had trouble finding the strike zone. Kellie Straughn and Maureen Equi also had doubles in the game and several others contributed with timely base hits. Beth Smoot batted four times and scored four times. Straughn, Leslie Thornton and Kristen Devine had perfect nights at the plate. Having played in a local league with no stealing, Cohasset's girls were anxious to hit the base paths running. And run they did, stealing 15 bases before the final out.

Smoot caught a terrific game behind home plate in sweltering heat. She and O'Neil combined on just one of a series of defensive gems by Cohasset when O'Neil threw out a runner stealing home and Smoot laid down a perfect tag. Megan Cox made a nifty catch of a line drive in the second inning. Sarah Motley grabbed a pop up to short left field that could have easily dropped in for a base hit. Abby Murphy made the play of the night when she snared a blistering line drive while playing the "hot corner." Leslie Thornton finished off North Randolph in the last inning, ending a potential rally by making an unassisted out at first base.

Clara Sceery and Sarah Donovan both scored twice in the Cohasset victory.

Editor's Note: Because of space restrictions in this week's sports section, submitted articles and photos from the public will appear in the July 20 issue.

There is something different about this year's Red Sox.

The team is in first place and the players actually give a hoot about something other than their batting averages and bank accounts.

On Monday, standout third baseman Tim Naehring hosted a charity golf tournament to benefit the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation and Cancer research.

The golf tourney was held at the Blue Hills Country Club in Canton with a reception following at the Tent in Marina Bay in Quincy.

Naehring, who could have spent the three-day all-star break working on his tan, instead helped raise more than $60,000 for some very worthy causes.

And he wasn't the only Red Sox who chipped in to help out on Monday.

Slugger Jose Canseco, knuckle baller Tim Wakefield, centerfielder Lee Tinsley, relief pitcher Mike Maddox and third baseman Chris Donnells all took part in the charity event.

In addition to the golf tourney, Naehring and KISS 108's Bill Costas auctioned off some impressive sports memorabilia like a Larry Bird autographed basketball and a Mo Vaughn autographed shirt at the Tent afterwards.

(The only stroke of bad luck was Naehring jamming his left shoulder in Saturday's game against Minnesota. He was unable to play golf but was a gracious and smiling host at the Blue Hills.)

There are many charity golf events each year but you don't see many athletes take time in the middle of the season, especially when injured, to give something back.

No matter where the Sox finish in the pennant race, Naehring, Canseco and the others Sox are winners.

The Hingham Fourth of July Road Race has grown to the point where its success may be its downfall unless some changes are made for the '96 edition. But don't expect a race-less fourth next year. There are too many qualified, experienced individuals involved with the organization of the race not to see what needs to be changed.

One of the orders of business will have to be to make sure more than enough T-shirts and race numbers are ordered. Many of the 1,347 runners who made up this year's field were a bit peeved because they didn't receive the T-shirts that were supposed to be part of the $8 entry fee. In defense of the race organizers, they couldn't possibly have expected the nearly 1,000 runners who registered on the morning of the race. Volunteers had no choice but to write out numbers for the late entries.

Despite the unexpected amount of runners, the Hingham Recreation Department, Hingham Police and other volunteers staged a first-class event. Traffic control was excellent as police kept the finish area clear of traffic and moved anxious spectators back onto the sidewalks, leaving the runners plenty of room to run.

Organizers should consider banning rollerbladers from the course and definitely keep the bikes off. Both offer a potential hazard to the runners who have trained to put in a solid holiday effort. The race is only going to grow. The last thing the runners and organizers need are non-runners adding to the throng as it makes its way down Main Street. And while we're on the subject, just how much effort does it take to ride a trail bike 4.6 miles downhill?

There was a slight delay with some of the results due to the numbers, but the finish results were posted complete with overall place, time and pace per mile. Nothing to whine about there.

Other than the bikes and rollerbladers, the only other problem I had with the race was the fact that there was a 10-and-under age group for both boys and girls. It has always been my firm belief that a kid that young shouldn't be running, much less racing, 4.6 miles. Race organizers, while generous with the awards, and Hingham's race is more than generous, are unwittingly doing more harm than good for the kids by including such a young age group.

I also question the parents' wisdom in letting their kids race that far. And don't give me the song and dance routine that their your children trained for the race and were ready to run it. No 10 year old should be training in the first place.

Those involved with this year's race should be proud of the way they pulled it off. Without a doubt, Hingham's Main Street romp is the most popular race on the South Shore. Organizers had the best of both worlds this year. They were able to come out of a crisis and produce a quality event, and able to see clearly what is needed in the coming years. I'm already looking forward to covering next year's race. Leave me a 6 a.m. wake-up call and I'll be set for Hingham's best race yet.

Hingham bank branch takes root on Elm Street

By Marilyn Jackson
Mariner staff

The Hingham Institution for Savings, with assets of more than $162 million, is planning to open branch offices in Cohasset and North Scituate sometime this fall, according to president and chief executive officer Robert H. Gaughen Jr.

He said he already has filed an application with the Commissioner of Banks for permission to open a branch at 13 Elm St., Cohasset. An application to open a branch at 400 Gannett Road, North Scituate Village, will be filed shortly.

Both sites formerly housed the Cohasset Savings Bank which was merged with the Shawmut National Corporation of Boston and Hartford last year. Shawmut recently sold the real estate to investors and moved the deposits to its branch in Cohasset Plaza.

"We see ourselves as a local community bank," said Gaughen. "I live in Cohasset. Our vice president of lending is Peter Smollett, who lives in Scituate, and one of our directors is Jim White of Scituate, who is a retired commercial banker."

Common, Gropius House may get place in history

By James Loewenstein
Mariner correspondent

A Cohasset home designed by world-famous architect Walter Gropius may be listed on the prestigious National Register of Historic Places.

And the Massachusetts Historical Commission is scheduled to cast a crucial vote in September on whether the Cohasset Common and the buildings surrounding it should also be on that list, said David Wadsworth, who is the National Register coordinator for the Cohasset Historical Commission.

About two months ago, the Cohasset Historical Commission filed an application with Massachusetts Historical Commission seeking to have the Gropius-designed home placed on the National Register, he said.

Gropius' international style of architecture "played a major role in the evolution of modern American architecture," said Wadsworth, who is also a curator at the Cohasset Historical Society.

The Gropius house "is considered to be one of a group of four houses that established the International style of Gropius in the United States," he said.

American architects later adapted aspects of Gropius' style, such as flat roofs, box-like structures, and functional designs, he said.

"Many, many other houses that have flat roofs owe considerably to Gropius' International style house," he said.

The house, which was completed in 1939, has an unadorned, box-like structure, a flat roof and a mostly white facade. It appears to be the second residence

Accord possible over boat yard dispute

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

There was still some skepticism this week among commercial fishermen, pleasure boaters, and local historical preservationists following a public hearing over the property owner's plans for the site which houses Cohasset's only boat yard.

But thanks to an olive branch extended by the new owner — both sides walked away with some hope that a compromise could be reached.

William Hanney, president of Stoughton-based Entertainment Cinemas, wants to build three residences, including one for himself, in existing buildings on the 16,000 square foot harbor front parcel.

Fishermen and boaters don't want to see the Mill River Marine Railway, Inc., a boat yard and boat repair

Hedlund holds office hours

Sen. Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) will hold regular local office hours on Friday, July 21, from 11 a.m. to 1:45 p.m. in Room 2B at the Cohasset Town Hall.

Office hours provide an opportunity for constituents to voice their opinions and comments in person without having to travel to the State House. An appointment may be made by contacting Kathleen in the Senator's office at (617) 722-1646. Walk-ins are also encouraged.

Recycling made simple

Through a donation made by North Shore Recycled Fibers/The Newark Group, residents of Cohasset have recycling information at their fingertips 24 hours a day by dialing a recycling hotline (1-800-800-6881 or (617) RECYCLE.

A grant from NSRF, one of the state's leading recycling companies and a key provider of recycling services to the town, ensures that Cohasset's recycling message will remain part of a non-profit, statewide recycling hotline dubbed "E-Call." When Cohasset's zipcode is entered following a call to the hotline, a voicemail message will be played, detailing Cohasset's latest recycling news.

Clarification is noted

A story in last week's Cohasset Mariner on the Comprehensive Site Assignment (CSA) filed with the state by Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) did not make it clear that landfill owner Paul Barry had withdrawn an offer of a global settlement.

At a June 19 selectmen's meeting, Barry said about the offer "let's go to court and take all this off the public officers in the town."

That meeting followed weeks of public officials' wrangling over how to proceed with discussions on the "global settlement" which tied resolutions of two lawsuits CHL has launched against the town in with issues surrounding the operation of the landfill and the proposed expansion.

Father Keohane bids adieu to Cohasset after 20 years

By Laura Ricketson Doherty
Mariner correspondent

For the Rev. John Keohane, serving almost 20 years as pastor of St. Anthony Parish, has been much like the biblical wedding feast at Cana.

"They saved the best wine until the end of the celebration, just as my best years have been in Cohasset," he says.

This year has been especially eventful in that he recently celebrated his 75th birthday and 50th anniversary as a priest. And, as of last week, he has been granted senior priest retirement status by Cardinal Law.

Born in Boston, Father Keohane is a member of the class of 1941 at Boston College. In his last year there he entered St. John's Seminary in Brighton. At that time college tuition was $300, he recalls, and many aspects of college life were "a lot different." He commuted by MBTA, and Boston College was then all male.

It was an easy decision to enter the priesthood.

"It pleased my friends and parents. Such a commitment then, met with a pat on the back."

Today many would look in askance, he notes, attributing this to a changing world.

In June, 1945, he was ordained by then Archbishop Richard Cushing at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross. His first assignment was in Arlington. After that he volunteered for a special "lend-lease" program and was sent to Tallahassee, Florida, where he served as chaplain at Florida State University. He liked working with that particular age group which he recalls as being "bright and spirited."

After a return assignment in Malden, he became a chaplain in the United States Air Force from 1955-75.

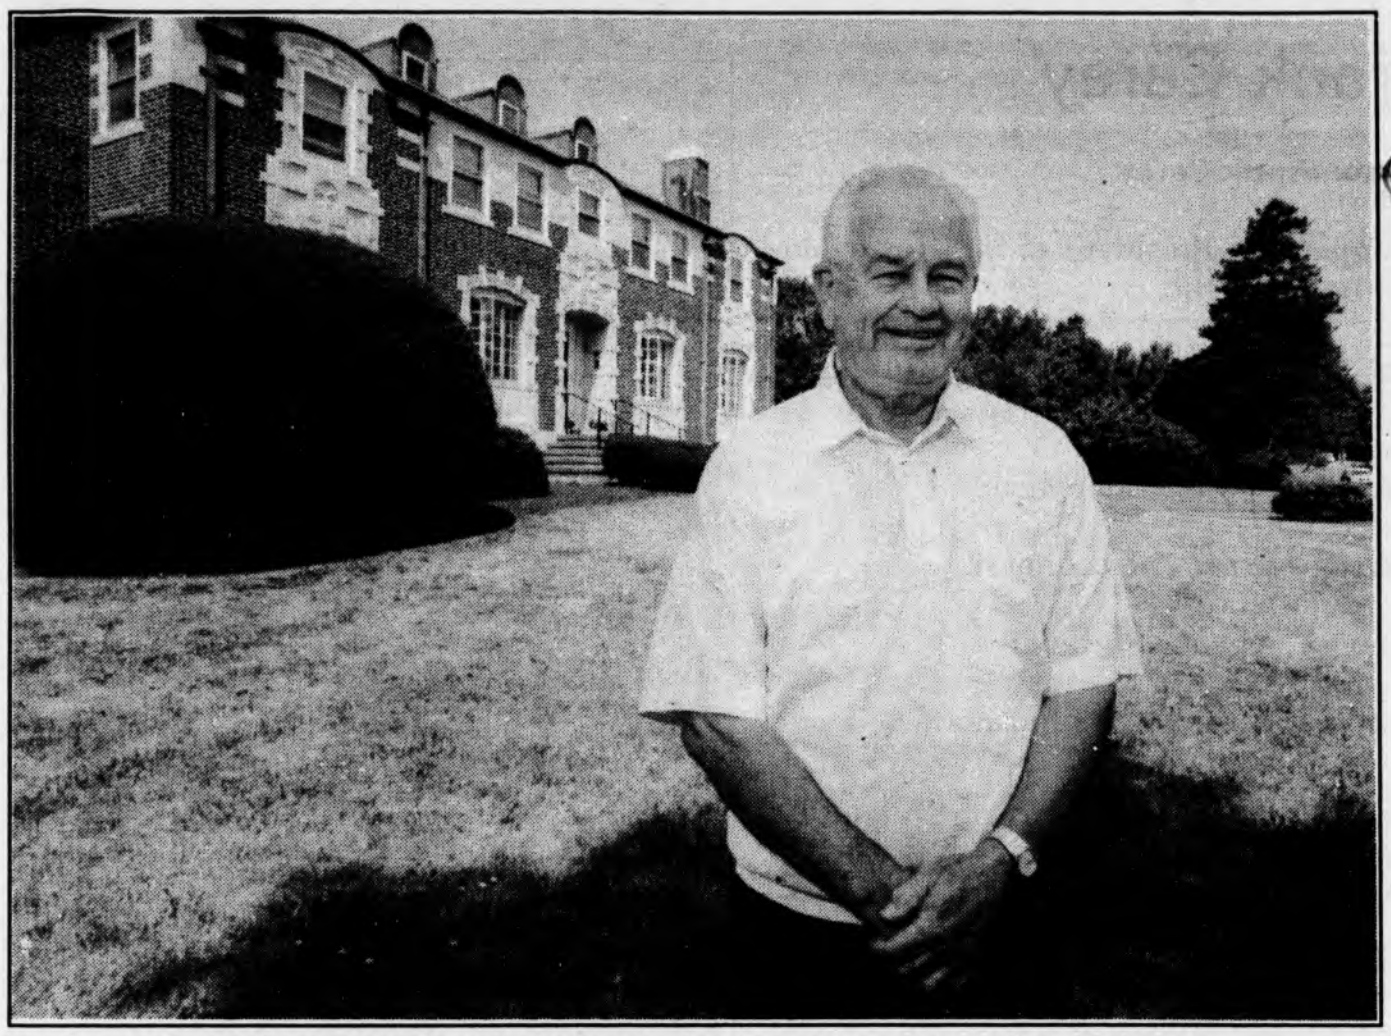
"I served eight different places from Coco Beach, Florida to Anchorage, Alaska. Although there was no place I wished I hadn't been stationed," he says.

He especially appreciated Veisbaden, Germany.

"It was so clean" and also was close to many other European countries, Keohane recalls.

Traveling is a special interest to Keohane and now that he is retired he hopes to return and see many of the friends he made throughout Europe.

"In the military we used to joke sometimes about being retired while still on active duty. I hope to remain active during my retirement," he chuckles.



The Rev. John Keohane recently retired after serving 20 years as pastor of St. Anthony's.

He found the military "self-contained, a world of its own." While stationed at Andrews Air Force Base in Washington, DC, he lived off-base.

"When my friends and family visited, they liked to sight-see," he remembers. In Blythville, Arkansas, where he lived on base, "there was no place to go so it was possible to get closer to people."

One responsibility special to him was his involvement in adoptions. While at Blythville he was able to arrange for his neighbors, a young couple, to adopt two children from Germany.

In Germany, when President Kennedy was assassinated, he recalls the almost universal disbelief. It was "difficult not knowing what was happening," he recalls.

Serving in the military was different. There were no older people.

"Just single men — no women there at that time."

An especially difficult assignment was Vietnam.

"They were closing down hostilities, but they were still shooting at my tent, too," Keohane recalls.

At that time, the war had reached "the height or depth of unpopularity. The boys were not getting mail and packages. There was no place to go seven days a week. You were a presence for them."

Salt marsh mosquitoes due soon

That heat!

It might have been excruciating, but it has had its plusses, according to Ray Zucker, assistant supt. of the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project.

"It's good for us, bad for your lawns," he said, explaining that with the heat and extensive drought (there is a minus-eight inch drought level now, he said) there is not much stagnant water around where mosquitoes can breed.

Overall, PCMCP has recorded 2,688 fewer calls this year than at the same time last year.

But, don't get too excited, Zucker cautioned. PCMCP deals with from 30-40 species of mosquito from the beginning of spraying season (about Memorial Day) and, now that flood tides have peaked, the salt marsh mosquito is expected to breed and invade.

"We might have problems with salt marsh mosquitoes in the coastal communities and along the North River so we're stepping up our larvaciding operations," he said.

The salt marsh mosquito is, Zucker added, "an aggressive biter" (aren't they all?) and has been documented travelling 20-miles inland in a wind.

Last week, Norwell residents called the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project (PCMCP) with 546 requests to have their backyards sprayed. By way of comparison, there were only 342 requests recorded from Norwell residents during the week that ended June 23.

Norwell topped the last last week beating out Scituate which had 545 calls. There were 535 calls received from Hanover during the week that ended with July 14. PCMCP officials figure that the total number of calls for the week (648) averaged out to 130 each day.

Also in the 400-call range was Middleboro with 477.

Figures for other towns in the PCMCP area for the week that ended July 14 included: Abington, 155; Brockton, 191; Carver, 238; Cohasset, 90; Duxbury, 264; East Bridgewater, 106; Halifax, 122; Hanson, 199; Hingham, 177; Hull, 25; Kingston, 139; Lakeville, 164; Marion, 27; Marshfield, 476; Mattapoisett, 44; Pembroke, 304; Plymouth, 212; Plympton, 56; Rochester, 120; Rockland, 121; Wareham, 128; West Bridgewater, 131; Whitman, 42.

To have your yard sprayed, call PCMCP at 617-585-5450 or FAX them at 617-582-1276. You may also write to: PCMCP, PO Box 72, Kingston, 02364-0072. Don't forget (if writing or FAXing) to include your name, address, date you want the yard sprayed and telephone number.

Parking stickers available

The Cohasset Recreation Department still has parking stickers available for residents. The stickers, which are valid for Sandy Beach, Government Island and Parker Avenue boat ramp, will be on sale through the summer.

As of Monday, July 17, stickers are issued only on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to noon.

Father Keohane. . .

Keohane is a quiet, gentle man with a quick sense of humor and multi-faceted personality. In a discussion of the importance of architecture on the spirit, he describes his experience in one church which had just been completed at considerable expense.

"There was nothing there. For, isn't architecture like frozen music and shouldn't it lift you up?" he asks.

The great response of town residents to volunteer service is what impressed Keohane most about Cohasset. He points out evidence of this both in the community and in his own parish. The religious education program particularly impressed him.

"There were 55 teachers, some of whom were teachers coming from teaching all day for a class here."

In addition, the 20 hours of service required of confirmation students as part of their studies was impressive to him.

"I know at times it was difficult for them to find opportunities and to figure out what they could do," he says.

Keohane is young for his years.

"I still can't believe I'm 75. I've been blessed and am thankful for it all."

In addition to travel plans, Keohane will live in Mashpee on Cape Cod where he will continue to perfect his golf game which he has been enjoying for 60 years. He also plans to return to Cohasset to help out from time to time when needed.

Appeal of Shaw's decision no surprise, planner says

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Cohasset resident and local businessman Donald Staszko, who owns Cohasset Plaza which includes a Super Stop & Shop, has appealed the planning board's approval of the Shaw's Supermarket project to Norfolk Superior Court on the grounds that increased traffic would hurt his auto dealership on the Scituate/Cohasset line.

"The decision will allow the premises to be developed in such a manner as to create severe traffic problems on Route 3A at plaintiff's property, which will severely impact and injure plaintiff, will reduce the value and utility of plaintiff's property, and will make it more difficult for customers to come to said property and will discourage them from coming," the complaint states.

Staszko's auto dealership, South Shore Chevy Geo, is 800 feet south of Cushing Plaza.

Planning Board Chairman Alfred S. Moore, Jr. said he is struck by the irony of the owner of a competing plaza suing to stop the Shaw's Supermarket project for Cushing Plaza because of traffic concerns for his auto dealership.

"There's no mention of Stop & Shop (in the complaint)," Moore said.

"It's interesting that an auto dealership appeals because of a potential increase in traffic — how many auto dealerships are there on poorly traveled roads?"

Moore noted that the Shaw's plaza, which will include a 40,000-square foot supermarket and 30,000 square feet of additional retail space on the 24-acre site, is not being built "on virgin forest."

He explained that there's a lot of activity at the current Cushing Plaza which generates traffic.

"We hired our own traffic consultant who determined the overall increase in traffic (with the Shaw's project) will not be that great," Moore said.

The traffic light at Beechwood Street and Rte. 3A will be timed so traffic won't back up and curb cuts which exist along the front of the current plaza would be eliminated.

"The situation will be a lot better than it is now," Moore said.

"Frankly, I wouldn't be surprised if the suit is thrown out," he added.

Moore said the planning board was thorough in its handling of the Shaw's project.

"We did our homework as well as we've ever done it," he said. "The folks at Shaw's said they've never been put through the ringer on any site like this."

Moore said he isn't surprised by Staszko's action because Staszko had a court stenographer recording the planning board meetings on Shaw's. He said the suit would delay but not kill the Shaw's project.

Staszko also distributed a press release at a planning board meeting that stated his concerns regarding traffic and drainage.

The appeal field by Atty. Robert A. Stolzberg of Charmoy, Stolzberg & Holian, P.C. of Boston, asks the court to declare the planning board's decision to approve the project null and void and to enter a new decision including "findings that the applicant's proposal for Cushing Plaza constitutes an unsuitable development, which will result in significant detriment to the neighborhood and the natural qualities of the town."

The nine-page planning board decision approving the project includes a request that Shaw's ask the state for permission to install a traffic light at the new plaza entrance near Bergson's. If the state turns down that request, the supermarket is asked to pay for a police officer to direct traffic at the entrance when necessary.

Planners positive about proposed Rte. 3A subdivision

By Sarah R. Coffey
Mariner correspondent

Despite concerns about traffic on 3A, the planning board voted last week to approve the preliminary plans for the Rose Hill subdivision.

The decision was unanimous among voting members, William Good, Jean Simonds and John O'Toole.

Chairman Alfred S. Moore, Jr. who lives on Fair Oaks Lane which abuts the site, abstained. Member Robert Sturdy was in Italy and missed the meeting.

Current plans are to build 13 single-family homes with three or four bedrooms on the 18.5 acre property, owned Charles and Maria Pape.

The property, which — going toward Hingham — is next to the wooded area that abuts Jonathan Livingston Seagull Plaza, was once used as a parking lot for school buses. The cinder-block garage near the highway, was used for bus maintenance and will be demolished, Moore explained in a telephone interview.

The meeting was a continuation of the last month's discussion of the proposed subdivision.

Board member John O'Toole asked about more traffic being added onto the already congested Route 3A.

Engineer Donald Moncevicz said: "3A needs special thinking and planning design. It's not just a simple intersection."

Moncevicz said he will talk with state highway engineers to get their input.

Legally, the owner has every right to place the entrance off 3A, Moore said, even though it will be "putting that much more strain on an already tired highway."

Moore explained that turning left onto 3A is becoming increasingly difficult to deal with.

"At certain times of the day it's really very difficult — you almost take your life in your hands," he said.

"But anyone who owns property can't be denied access," Moore said. "The whole issue will be best served with a traffic signal.

"We've been pushing for one at the entrance to King Street."

Site planner Bradford Kimball explained that the land on both sides of the entrance would not be developed.

The 3A entrance is bordered on one side by a bird sanctuary and on the other by town-owned conservation land.

Land next to the conservation area might be donated to the town, offered Kimball.

That land can be best used for a buffer zone because it is "for all intensive purposes undevelopable," Moore said.

"With the size of the lots plus the buffer zones, it will be a nice private area," he added.

Kimball plans to finalize plans on the project by the end of the year.

Moore said the next step is for the developer to come up with a definitive subdivision plan.

"These were preliminary plans and have nothing definite at all," Moore said about the July 12 hearing.

"The ball is now in the developer's court," he said. "He can come back and file a definitive plan — we'll have another public hearing and get into the real nitty-gritty."

He explained as plans progress, the board will pay close attention to drainage. Sanctuary Pond which abuts the site "is an earthen dam affair which if it ever let loose" would unleash a 12-foot deep large body of water on downtown Cohasset. Moore said the planning board would address any potential run-off from development of the site.

Board will levy fines against water ban violators

By Alison B. Shyer
Mariner correspondent

Despite requests by the board of selectmen and some concerned Cohasset gardeners, the water commission voted last week not to lift the water ban, which limits all outdoor watering to the hours between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m.

In a meeting held last Wednesday night at town hall, the commission also voted to adopt new and carefully worded regulations and to impose fines on Cohasset residents who violate them. The fines — $50 for a first offense and $100 for every subsequent violation — will be issued like traffic tickets.

The new rules, enforceable as soon as they are filed with the town clerk and published in a newspaper, may include, at the discretion of the commission, any combination of the following: odd/even outdoor watering; outdoor watering ban; outdoor watering hours (currently in effect); hand-held hose watering hours; a ban on filling swimming pools; and a ban on automatic sprinkler systems.

The current ban, put into effect July 6, according to Selectman Peter Pratt, is a much more "blunt instrument" to fight the town's water problems. All outdoor watering is prohibited, without exception, between 6 a.m. and 10 p.m. Criminal complaints may be filed against violators and brought to the Quincy courthouse, which the new ticketing system is designed to avoid.

"The new restrictions are much more specific and will allow the water commissioners a Chinese menu, if you will, from which to design a water ban" that will suit the town's needs, said Pratt.

With the discussion ranging from the best time to water vegetables to horror stories about days without showers and toilets that won't flush, the handful of people who showed up at the meeting — mostly residents of Deep Run, Rust Way, Rustic Drive and Linden Drive — were deeply divided in their priorities.

Bill Blaze of Rustic Drive told of running to the sink with his two-year-old daughter whose eye was filling with blood from a nearby cut, only to turn on the tap and have nothing come out. He urged the committee to "not allow any exceptions to the ban."

The board of selectmen requested that the commission consider allowing outdoor watering during certain daytime hours, citing dozens of complaints from residents — a few of whom were present at the meeting — for whom the late night/early morning watering is inconvenient.

It was ruled out as a confusing and needless tampering with a ban that is working.

To persistent questioning by Dick Aikens of North Main St., Water Commission Chairman Fred Koed stressed that Cohasset does not have a water supply problem, but a water distribution problem.

"There is no water shortage at the reservoir but there is a shortage at the tap," Koed said. He explained that the pipes aren't big enough to get water to all Cohasset residents and is being used before it gets to the affected areas.

Koed called the current ban a "community effort" and said that the fines "will put some teeth into" the regulations.

Cohasset's water distribution problems are not new to the inhabitants of the Linden Drive/Rust Way neighborhood, the farthest away from the town's water supply. After last year's record demand for water, however, the town vowed to update its antiquated system. Contractors are currently laying 6,000 feet of water main along Forest Ave., which by all accounts will solve the problem, and should be in place around Labor Day.

Until then, inhabitants of about 30 to 50 houses off Jerusalem Rd. are at the very least inconvenienced by no running water for most of the day and concerned by the impact the distribution problem might have on Cohasset's firefighting capabilities.

Cohasset Fire Chief Roger Lincoln says that the all day water ban has "increased the pressure in the area measurably" and adds that the fire department has a contingency plan that entails running a hose line from the Hingham system to supplement the water supply if necessary.

The water commission had been discussing using part of a Hingham water pipe on an interim basis to help alleviate the ban, but ultimately decided that the project was too costly and involved for the small amount of relief it would have provided.

During last week's heat wave, according to Dick Cohan, operations manager at the water plant, the water consumption was up slightly but there were no low pressure calls. "Apparently people have been adhering to the ban," he said. Cohan also said while driving around town, he has noticed only very few violators.

The police have not issued any tickets.

Pratt said that he thinks that "a mere warning (to the violators) has been sufficient to gain voluntary compliance (to the ban)," and added that he thinks that the town has come a long way in refocusing its priorities — firefighting and sanitation, not gardening — but said that he thinks that the water commission might vote at its next meeting, tonight, to allow some daytime watering with hand-held hoses.

Museum expands its hours

The Cohasset Historical Society has expanded the hours the Maritime Museum will be open to visitors. Interested citizens have volunteered their time to staff the museum on Saturdays from 9 a.m. to noon through the end of August. Until this year the museum was only open during afternoons.

The museum, located on Elm St. in Cohasset Village, exhibits a Minot Ledge Lighthouse collection and many exhibits documenting Cohasset's distinguished maritime history.

Maritime Museum hours are Saturdays through Aug. 26 from 9 a.m. to noon. The museum is also open Tuesday through through Sept. 30, from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m.

The Cohasset Historical Society also opens the adjacent Captain John Wilson House, built in 1810, from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. with the assistance of trained guides. David Wadsworth is the society's curator. This summer the Wilson House will be displayed as a 1910 teahouse, which it was at that time. Alissa Sexton, daughter of Peter and Anne Sexton, graduated from Nobles and Greenough School in Dedham on Wednesday, June 14. Alissa was a member of the varsity ski team and was voted to the ISL All League for her talents in the sport. Sexton will be a volunteer in the City Year program before attending Trinity College in September, 1996.

Congratulations go to Kristin MacQuarrie, daughter of Chris and Jane Kyricos, who graduated with distinction from the University of Washington in Seattle on June 10. An economic geography major with a minor concentration in Russian, she was named to the President's List for academic achievement. At UW she was a coxswain for the undefeated freshman men's crew team and participated in a business internship in Moscow during the summer of 1994.

Kristin also worked on a geography ad hoc honors program that helped develop ideas for GIS applications for work items for the Duwamish Coalition. The purpose of this coalition is to preserve and reclaim industrial land in the Duwamish River Corridor in South Seattle and to expand the manufacturing and industrial base while protecting the natural environment. She was also elected leader of a five-person group that worked with the Duwamish Coalition Water Quality and Habitat Subcommittee to improve water quality in that area. Kristin attended Cohasset schools through Grade 9 and graduated from Phillips Academy in Andover in 1991.

Boston College Law School awarded Boston attorney Richard P. Campbell its Founder's Medal, the highest honor awarded by the school, in recognition of his outstanding achievements in the practice of law. In presenting the award at its 1995 commencement, law school dean Aviam Soifer praised Campbell's accomplishments in the practice of law as evidenced by his national reputation as a trial lawyer, his published writings, his leadership in numerous legal organizations and his "unusual combination of creativity and generosity."

Soifer remarked that Campbell's commitment to the law school has led to the Campbell Fund, which enables minority law students to clerk for judges of the Massachusetts Superior Court, and to the construction of a wing of the new library bearing the name of his late brother, Joseph Campbell, a Vietnam War veteran who died from illness caused by exposure to Agent Orange.

A 1974 graduate of the law school, Mr. Campbell resides in Cohasset and is the founder of Campbell & Associates Professional Corporation, a 20-attorney Boston law firm with offices throughout New England.

A sense of where you are Having sifted through a barrage of demographic data and market research, Michael J. Weiss has compiled, "Latitudes and Attitudes: An Atlas of American Taste, Trends, Politics and Passions," a new book which divides the United States into "consumer markets, of communities defined less by their geography than by the passions of their populace."

Based upon this philosophy of "you are what you buy," Weiss has chronicled what makes us tick — the defining characteristics of the region in which we life.

Demographically, the Boston area (population 5,688,851) extends north into southeastern Vermont and southern New Hampshire, west to Worcester, and east to Provincetown. Springfield rates its own region and the New Bedford-Fall River area is assigned to the greater Providence rubric.

According to "Latitudes and Attitudes," greater Bostonians like to eat bagels but not Twinkies. We drink more beer than the national average, but rank in the bottom quarter in cigarette smoking and in the top fourth in percentage of joggers. We buy lots of personal computers but are less likely to own stationary power tools. We're among the most enthusiastic pro basketball viewers, and above average pro football fans. We ranked high in the category in Volvo ownership — but you already knew that.

We're below average viewers of soap operas, "Oprah," "Donahue," and "Current Affair." But we watch C-Span and "Saturday Night Live" more than our Midwestern and Southern counterparts, and are more likely to subscribe to The New Yorker than the typical American.

We're above average in our percentage of political liberals — but above average in conservatives, too. (Only in political apathy, apparently, do we rank below the mean.)

"Compared to the general population," writes Weiss, "Boston residents are both well-traveled and well-informed... no doubt the presence of more than 100 colleges has contributed to these intellectual — not to mention liberal — interests. And yet for all these expressions of civilized taste, there's a hustler's streak not far beneath the surface: Bostonians are crazy about gambling..."

For the last word on our region, Weiss leaves it to novelist and Rockland native George V. Higgins, who observed of this "spiritual tug-of-war" among his neighbors: "Many of them are genuinely smart and well educated, either in the schools or in the streets."

Cohasset's not-so-gold side of town has water problems, too

To the Editor:

Once again the people on the "gold coast" side of town have captured the media attention regarding their "no water pressure" problems that go along with the beautiful "gold coast" summer.

Those of us on the "not so gold" side of town have been experiencing water pressure problems for years because we, too, live at the very end of the water distribution system. Oftentimes my family and many of our neighbors have to toilets as many as five or six times just to get anything to go down. Our showers also take many minutes longer just to rinse out shampoo.

This extra flushing and extra time in the shower itself causes us to use more water than we normally would, never mind the added expense to our water usage bill.

letters

When I took the time to call the newly staffed water department to advise them that the "not so gold coast" also has many water pressure problems, all they could tell me was that they are working on it from the other side of town. I really didn't feel assured that anything would be done on my side of town.

Until the town starts treating all its consumers and citizens alike, the attitude that was encountered this week at the water department will continue.

Hand-held hose concession needed

(Editor's note: A copy of the following letter was sent to the Cohasset Mariner for publication.)

To the Water Commission:

Why is it too confusing to allow a hand-held hose?

What is confusing to me is the inflexible attitude taken by the Water Commission in not considering the needs of the town as a whole. What about the elderly with their small plots — the current watering hours are often not possible or safe for them. What about public places maintained by volunteers in the town? A terrible loss to the town if those places cannot be watered at reasonable times.

A small concession to allow a hand-held hose would go far to save these areas and allow citizens a chance to keep their plantings alive.

I urge you to take a long look at the town some of us want to preserve as a beautiful place. This problem was created by negligence by the Water Commission in maintaining the distribution system. Credit is due the current Water Commission for work being done to correct the problem, but judgment in this current issue of reasonable water restrictions is flawed.

Opposition to landfill expansion urged

(A copy of the following open letter to Cohasset residents was provided to the Cohasset Mariner for publication).

Dear Fellow Citizens:

I find it the ultimate irony that on one hand the state is aggressively protecting the ground water at the expense of homeowners with the new Title V regulations and on the other hand considering the expansion of a landfill which contains a massive unlined section with documented ground water pollution problems. In my book, it makes no sense. It is all the same ground water and the state should not make any exceptions for big business interests.

It is up to us, the citizens of this town, to aggressively protect our water supply, our air quality and the financial well-being of our town. Managing this landfill has cost up plenty. An expansion guarantees many more years of expenses and jeopardy.

If you are opposed to this expansion of Cohasset Heights Limited, please find the blue insert in today's Mariner and either write to Trudy Coxe and Governor Weld or fill out the enclosed postcard and mail it.

Citizens stopped Clean Harbors and citizens stopped the Walpole sludge site. We can do it here, too, with your help.

Local legislators plead for transportation relief

By Marilyn Jackson
Mariner staff

If commuter rail is not restored along the Greenbush line, state Rep. Frank M. Hynes, D-Marshfield, will demand that the projected $9 million annual operating costs be spent for more local buses, express buses, commuter boats and perhaps an experimental boat service out of Scituate Harbor.

"That would be second best," said Hynes who characterized the July 13 private meeting as a candid discussion of rail versus busway and financing.

Hynes, along with state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Reps. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, Paul Haley, D-Weymouth, and Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, and House Transportation Committee chairman Thomas Cahir, D-Bourne, met with state Transportation Secretary James Kerasiotes to discuss the $215 million rail restoration project.

"Everyone . . . was in agreement that something needs to be done" about providing transportation assistance to the South Shore, said Hedlund.

Added Haley: "I want to make sure that the money does not go elsewhere if the rail option is closed because the South Shore absolutely has to get something.

"Rail moves the most people and best relieves the burden on Route 3. Any other option that puts further pressure on Route 3 is untenable," Haley said.

Each concurred that "no build" is not an option. Kerasiotes told the group he does not expect to complete the evaluation of the merits of a guided busway along the Old Colony Railroad right-of-way until Labor Day.

That proposal, estimated to cost some $126 million, only recently became part of the transportation alternatives debate. In an earlier study, the concept of using buses along a paved right-of-way to a Braintree Red Line transfer or to South Station was rejected because it would have required removing or replacing existing tracks.

And, according to the study, if railroad freight operations were to be accommodated, rebuilding the tracks and embedding them in the pavement would have been necessary. That option studied using diesel buses with relatively low passenger-carrying capacity.

Kerasiotes said he has empathy with South Shore residents; he had lived in Weymouth and Marshfield and moved away "because of the horrendous commute," according to Hynes.

"The secretary and the administration believe that restoration of rail is the best alternative by far, but they are deeply concerned about the opposition to the rail," said Hynes, "concerned that if they were to suggest to move forward with the rail the opposition would in fact disallow that by objecting at every stage of the process and by litigating at every stage of the process.

"That fear would lead them if they were forced to make a judgment today to say 'no' to rail. I think that's a fair characterization," said Hynes.

He said the proposed busway has provided "some breathing room" to determine if their instincts are right on Greenbush.

The legislators again will meet with Kerasiotes before the busway feasibility study is released.

Braintree's representative Sullivan suggested that if the MBTA decides to proceed with a busway, the T should consider taking the right-of-way at Church Street (which runs parallel to the Southeast Expressway and the Red Line near Braintree Square) and joining the Red Line there — the site of the old Braintree railroad station — rather than bringing the guided buses onto the Southeast Expressway and ending up in gridlock at Freeport Street in Dorchester.

During the 90-minute meeting, the legislators and Kerasiotes also discussed a proposal offered by Cohasset architectural designer Kevin O'Keeffe to build a three-mile commuter rail spur at the Route 3-228 interchange on Hingham Street, Rockland, and run it westward to the Old Colony Plymouth line's Accord Station in South Weymouth.

Two miles of this line would run through the South Weymouth Naval Air Station, which is slated to be decommissioned by 1997. One mile of the spur would run through private property.

Scott Bosworth of Kerasiotes' office told the legislators that that one mile over private property is "very valuable" and would require extensive landtaking costs. The concept has not been dismissed, but it is fair to say the initial reaction is that costs would be prohibitive, Bosworth told them.

Hedlund added that the Massachusetts Highway Department is looking into the proposal but the state agency is concerned about the increased traffic that would be generated.

Holding a referendum in the towns that would be directly affected by the rail restoration along the Greenbush corridor also was debated.

Although Kerasiotes said government by referendum is not good policy, he said he would discuss with Gov. William Weld and Lt. Gov. A. Paul Cellucci the value of a referendum, according to Hynes.

Hedlund, however, was the only one present who did not express unequivocal support for the ballot question. "The recent town meeting results (in Hingham, Scituate and earlier in Cohasset) should not be diminished," he said.

Hynes said if a referendum is to be held, the governor should file special legislation to call for the special election. Any other process would be too cumbersome.

"Pending the outcome of a referendum, the administration would know whether there was support for the train and how strong," said Hynes. "If 60 percent of the population votes and three out of five say, 'Go with it,' that's fairly substantial. But if 50 percent favored it, that would virtually kill it," he said.

Regarding financing the restoration of rail along the Old Colony line with state or federal dollars, Kerasiotes said it was not a major issue to him, according to Hynes.

"He has a discretion to use federal funds or state," said Hynes. "There is sufficient money in the (10-year MBTA plan) to build Greenbush if they choose to do it.

"By not using federal money, however, the secretary essentially gains more control over the project because, at the very least, he has some certitude about the timetable of the project . . . There is not a similar timetable. The federal government could take three years to respond.

"It's more of a planning issue than a financial issue. The problem is he should have been up front (about that) from the start," said Hynes, referring to the recent uproar by local officials who learned that federal transportation dollars had been spent on other projects throughout the state.

Hynes added that Hingham's Alexander Macmillan, who opposes the rail project, differs with Kerasiotes' interpretation of the role of the federal government in such a major transportation construction project.

When Kerasiotes said he would be filing a request with the legislature to issue $50 million in transportation bonds to finance expanded commuter boat service and enlarged terminals for both the South and North Shores.

Hedlund said it would make a lot more sense to operate a commuter boat from Scituate on a 60-day trial basis — for a lot less money — before seeking $50 million in bonds. "Both Hynes and I are going to pursue that."

SAFE to hold public hearing July 23

SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion) will hold a public hearing July 23 to hear public comments on the proposed expansion of the Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill.

The public hearing will be held at 7:30 p.m. Sunday, July 23, in Trueblood Hall at the Unitarian Parish House, 23 North Main St.

The specific focus of the hearing will be the Comprehensive Site Assessment (CSA) on the existing landfill which CHL has recently filed with the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs (EOEA).

Interested persons have until 5 p.m. Monday, July 24, to submit written comments on the CSA to EOEA Secretary Trudy Coxe.

"We are holding this hearing to give the residents of Cohasset a chance to speak out in person against this expansion and about their many concerns with the existing Cohasset Heights landfill," said Linda Keller, president of SAFE.

"Both SAFE and the Cohasset Board of Selectmen have requested that Secretary Coxe hold a public hearing on the CSA," said John McNabb, vice-president of SAFE. "So far, we have not received any response to these requests.

"Hundreds of Cohasset residents have written comments about the five environmental impact reports for this proposed expansion," Keller said. "These earlier reports were all rejected, because they were inadequate but also because so many of us spoke out against it.

"We have invited Secretary Trudy Coxe and the new Commissioner of the Department of Environmental Protection, David Struhs, to attend," said McNabb. "We hope and expect that state officials will attend to hear the concerns of Cohasset residents.

"This hearing will be an invaluable opportunity for Cohasset residents to speak out about this potential threat to our water supply."

Supt. Hart gets high marks

By Sarah R. Coffey
Mariner correspondent

Superintendent Stephen Hart rated an average of 8.1 for the 1994-1995 school year out of a possible 9, despite a recent vote of no confidence by the teachers' union.

The school committee unveiled its annual evaluation of the superintendent last week.

The committee's evaluation was divided into seven categories: relationships with the school committee; community relationships; human resources management; educational leadership; business and finance; personal qualities; and accomplishment of the annual goals set by the school committee and the superintendent.

Hart was commended for managing the budget, having a realistic approach to funding, and being successful in obtaining funding.

He was also praised for improving the professional development program considerably, showing a thorough knowledge of each school, and recruiting excellent administrative talent.

He was cited for being a strong leader, ensuring the system met state requirements for curriculum and instructional time, and providing excellent administration of the town-wide survey.

The evaluation noted that he handled several difficult personnel matters with a good balance between sensitivity and pragmatism.

Under areas of improvement, the committee recommended that Hart should try to create an attitude within faculty where introspection is routine and welcomed and where change is seen as positive and exciting.

Hart, in thanking the committee for their evaluation, said there is "always room for improvement."

The only way for him to be successful is with the support of the school committee, town and staff, he said.

Hart said his overall goal is to do the best he can do for the students of the town.

"Any public school should have the same advantages as private school kids," he stated.

Ralph Kidder, chairman of the school committee, said the evaluation reflects Hart's leadership through trying times.

"It always struck me how effective Hart works with other departments in town," Kidder said. He compared Hart to U.S. Olympic gold medalist Mary Lou Retton, a gymnast, who always scored perfect 10's.

Jeanne Chittick, committee member, called Hart "masterful with dealing with people." She said the town was very fortunate to have Hart as superintendent.

Unhappy with some recent staffing and policy decisions, the teachers' union said at last month's school committee meeting that Hart is not leading during a period of tight finances and stress caused by implementation of the state education reform act.

Return of school calendar surveys sought

The committee voted last week to postpone reviewing the school calendar surveys until the July 31 deadline is reached, so as not to influence others.

Committee members said 330 responses have been received so far from the 770 sent out, a 43% return rate.

Anyone who has not responded yet is encouraged to do so.

A 100% respond rate is hoped for from the committee.

Anyone who has not yet received a survey can obtain one by stopping by the town hall, or getting in contact with the school committee.

The survey was sparked by recent heavy criticism of changes in the 1995-96 school calendar which eliminate one week of vacation.

Based on a desire to create more uninterrupted time for learning, the school committee voted last November to replace the traditional one week vacations in February and April with a one-week vacation in March.

School officials said that last year's calendar contained so many holidays, exam days and special days when students were released early so teachers could attend seminars, that of 36 weeks of school, only 13 contained five full days.

Parents whose views were sought last year via notices published in the lunch menus and through the Cohasset Mariner favored the change by a two-to-one margin. Sixty-seven percent of the teachers opposed the change, the school committee said.

Accord possible over boat yard dispute

facility, evicted after 25 years. And many citizens don't want to see the picturesque spot—known as Cohasset's "Motif #1" changed.

At the end of the two-hour long waterways licensing hearing, Tidelands Policy Coordinator Dennis W. Ducsik, PhD, of Coastal Zone Management, a state agency, said he could see both sides.

"There's potential here to find common ground," Ducsik said.

He noted that Hanney's proposal to include a boat yard and other uses at one end of the parcel and residences at the other "is an important gesture in the right direction."

But Ducsik complained about the lack of communication and "sketchy" plans presented.

He suggested a working group be formed to go over plans.

Hanney, who noted that he did not buy the property to sell it, liked the idea and invited all at the hearing to participate in upcoming meetings with an architect.

"I purchased the property because of its charm," he said. "I'd like to propose we sit down and continue discussion.

"I want to be a neighbor and not the most hated guy in Cohasset."

To allow time for a meeting to take place, Gregory A. Carrafiello, regional planner with the state Department of Environmental Protection, and Ducsik agreed to extend the deadline for public comments on Hanney's waterways license application 30 days until Sept. 14.

State waterways license rules require that all waterfront structures and piers be licensed. Under the state's amnesty from Mass. General Law Chapter 91, the state's revised regulations on private waterfront structures, all existing docks, sea walls or other structures can be licensed at minimal cost. Hanney filed an application to license the structures on the Border Street parcel, a process requiring state environmental review.

Hanney's application requests a waterways license to maintain both water-dependent and non water-dependent uses at the site.

Charles Humphreys, an attorney representing Hanney, said that the site needed a "practical solution" and noted that a boat yard alone cannot support the site economically.

"(The site) has a beautiful ambiance but like a Hollywood set, it looks okay from a distance," said Humphreys adding that the structures there are in a state of disrepair.

At one time there were retail shops, a ships chandlery, and apartments there which all co-existed with the boat yard. But when the apartments went out, the boat yard went into a 20-year decline, he explained.

Humphreys said Hanney, who bought the parcel two years ago from Peoples Bank of Brockton which had foreclosed on the prior owner, was the only person to step forward and put money on the line.

He asked the DEP expedite the license so Hanney could proceed to the next step of preparing more extensive site plans.

Attorney Donald Kaiser, representing Hanney, and Attorney Peter Eely, representing Mill River Marine Railway owner Frank Carey, in eviction proceedings said they would ask the judge to delay the eviction trial set for next month while the site design workshops are conducted.

Peoples Savings Bank sold the property to Hanney on the condition that it would be free of all tenants. Eviction proceedings against Carey have been going on for about two years.

Kaiser said a boat yard would be part of the site and it would be up to Carey if he wanted to be part of a newly configured boat yard.

Eely said Carey has been there 25 years and is "absolutely flexible to run the boat yard the way he has run it for the past 25 years.

"He will look at all alternatives to maintain a quality boat yard," he said.

Cohasset resident Jay Cody urged the DEP to reject the license application.

"Anyone who thinks that residential property in there would be compatible with a boat yard doesn't have both oars in the water," Cody said.

About 30 people attended the hearing and about a dozen presented testimony expressing concern over the boat yard and historical aspects of the site.

Dwight R. Dunk, an engineer with environmental consultants Coler & Colantonio hired by Hanney, explained that the buildings on the site would all remain but would be repaired and upgraded. The large building on the Gulf River side with the workshop downstairs would be renovated to include two upstairs apartments. The first floor would remain a water-dependent use. A residence is also planned for the building which sits on the rock on the Gulf River side. The three remaining buildings would be used for boat repair, a lobster pound, and possibly retail space.

Hingham bank branch takes root

Several years ago executives of the Hingham Institution for Savings and the Cohasset Savings Bank seriously contemplated a merger, but those plans did not materialize.

The Hingham Institution for Savings, a Massachusetts chartered savings bank, was incorporated in 1834 and is the oldest financial institution headquartered in Hingham. Its main office is located at 55 Main St., Hingham; two other branches are located in South Hingham and Hull.

Gaughen said the bank did not buy the entire real estate holdings once associated with Cohasset Savings Bank.

The Hingham bank bought the former bank building in Cohasset Village last month for $211,400 from Palmer Management Corp. of Cohasset. That property will be "condominiumized," with the bank owning a 66 percent interest, using the first floor and basement.

Gordon L. Deane of Cohasset, principal of Palmer Management, needed more office space, according to Gaughen. Deane's company, which has a number of contracts on both the West Coast and East Coast, recaptures methane at municipal landfills and then pipes the gas to a site where it is converted to energy.

The Hingham bank acquired the main bank building in North Scituate Village last month also for $180,000 from Ernesto Capparotta of Hull, a real estate investor. It did not purchase the adjacent building formerly used as executive offices for the Cohasset Savings Bank.

"It is our intention to provide a community-based alternative to the regional giants," said Gaughen. "The closing of Cohasset Savings Bank left a void in the

Common, Gropius House may get place in history

that Gropius designed in the United States, Wadsworth said.

Born in Berlin in 1883, Gropius founded the famous Bauhaus school of architecture in Weimar, Germany. He left his homeland after becoming unhappy with the Nazi government.

The Cohasset house was commissioned in 1937, the year Gropius arrived in America to become a professor of architecture at Harvard University, he said.

Beacon Hill resident Josephine Hagerty commissioned Gropius to design the house as a summer home, said her daughter-in-law, Mary Hagerty of Cohasset. Josephine Hagerty's son John was studying architecture at the Harvard School of Design and had recommended that she hire Gropius, who was one of his teachers.

Gropius had told Josephine Hagerty that he would not design the house until he had seen the site and knew that it inspired him, Mary Hagerty said.

After he saw the Cohasset location, which is at the north end of Sandy Beach, he told her, "I like it. It inspires me," and proceeded to design the house, she said.

"Gropius believed in using as much of the material around the area as you could," said Hagerty, who lived in the house for about five months in 1950. Gropius' principal reason for building it was to blend the architecture with nature, she said.

One side of the house and a living room wall are constructed of stone that was cut from the residence's rocky seaside site, she said.

However, when the ultra-modern house was first built, it "hadn't much appeal for most people in Cohasset," she said. Some thought it was "spoiling the coastline," she said.

Everybody thought Josephine Hagerty was a little crazy to build a house shaped like an egg-crate, she said.

Dr. Richard Anderson, who has owned the house since 1970, says the residence is "very functional and very simple. That's what I like about it."

After Josephine Hagerty died around 1951, the house was sold out of the family, and has since had several owners, including former Massachusetts Governor Foster Furcolo, Mary Hagerty, who stayed there during two to three months of one summer in the 1950s.

Various owners have made changes to the house.

"It isn't the way he (Gropius) built it," Hagerty said.

One owner needed additional space for his family and created a bedroom out of a second-floor sun deck, she said.

Two other bedrooms have been combined, and the kitchen has been expanded and remodeled, Anderson said. Gropius' metal window frames were replaced after they rusted from exposure to the salty air, he said.

But Wadsworth said "I'm confident that the people at the National Register will consider the architecture not to have been destroyed." He said the exterior is the same, and hopes that National Register officials will recognize that the changes were necessary and "were done in a way that is consistent with the original architecture."

It could take 2 -1/2 more years before federal officials make a final decision on whether to list it, Wadsworth said.

The Massachusetts Historical Commission has already given preliminary approval for the listing of both the Gropius house and the Cohasset Common Historic District on the National Register, he said.

Cohasset Common

Wadsworth said "chances are very good" that the Massachusetts Historical Commission will give final approval at their September meeting for the listing of the Cohasset Common Historic District. After that, National Park Service officials must also vote on the District's application, but Wadsworth said chances are also very good that they, too, will approve it.

The Cohasset Common Historic District, which is already listed on the Massachusetts Register of Historic Places, includes the 1713 Joseph Bates house, the 1722 Unitarian Parish house, the 1747 Meetinghouse, the 1824 Second Congregational Church, the 1857 Town Hall, and the 1900 St. Stephen's Episcopal Church.

The District includes "some of the town's most stately homes" and features buildings from the Georgian, Federal and Greek Revival styles of architecture, Wadsworth has written.

The District includes the buildings on Highland Avenue and on North Main Street from the South Shore Community Center to Sohier Street.

Placing the District on the National Register "will not limit (homeowners) in any way in the use of their property," Wadsworth said. "That's the furthest thing from our mind."

A listing is "really more of a prestige thing," said Noel Ripley, chairman of the Cohasset Historical Commission, which initiated the nomination.

A listing confers recognition and honor and "entitles you to put a plaque" on your door, said Wadsworth.

If the District were listed, an additional review of a building project would occur only if federal funds were involved or a federal permit were needed, he said.

"With the possible exception of a few parcels bordering on Little Harbor, it appears unlikely that a review would be required."

Wadsworth said he hopes that National Register officials will make available more definitive information on when a review might be needed.

Building in the District is already regulated by the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission, which "can require a modification of a design if it is (architecturally) inappropriate," he said.

Jean Manganaro, who lives in the District on North Main Street, said she feels "very strongly about preserving the character of these historic homes," but has concerns about whether the listing would be "confining" and wanted to research the matter further.

Wadsworth hopes the District will be placed on the National Register within the next year.

Currently, Cohasset has two other listings on the National Register: Government Island and the Cohasset Historical Society's headquarters, the Caleb Lothrup, at 14 Summer St.

Cohasset and North Scituate centers."

Last year, assets at the Cohasset Savings Bank branch in Cohasset totaled $36 million and at the North Scituate branch totaled $28 million.

"The viability of these villages is important to local individuals and businesses. Community banks have a value that extends far beyond their bricks and mortar . . .

"We look forward to bringing back a locally owned and managed bank that is committed to maintaining the quality of life in these communities," he said.

The bank is publicly traded on NASDAQ under the symbol HIFS. In announcing the acquisitions, Gaughen also released second quarter results.

Earnings for the second quarter of 1995 were $463,000 or $0.36 per share, compared to $559,000 or $0.44 per share for the same period in 1994 which were impacted by tax benefits.

On a pre-tax basis, second quarter 1995 earnings were $693,000, an increase of $224,000 above earnings reported for the same period last year.

During the second quarter, the bank originated $7.893 million in loans, bringing net loans to a total of $108.334 million as of June 30, 1995. The loan portfolio has increased nearly 8 percent since year's end.

Nonperforming assets dropped 25 percent over the quarter to a total of $1.002 million as of June 30. Comparably, nonperforming assets were $1.343 million at June 30, 1994. Stockholders' equity as of June 30 was $17.16 million or 10.6 percent of total assets.

Three weeks ago, the bank's directors declared a quarterly cash dividend of $0.07 per share, an increase of $0.02 per share over the previous quarterly dividend of $0.05 per share.

"The board adopted this increase based upon the continued vitality of our core earnings and the strength of our capital position," said Gaughen.

Students make difference for aerobics instructor

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

Mary Jane Butera may already be certified and an experienced aerobics instructor of more than 12 years, but that doesn't stop her from working to improve the combined seven sessions she instructs per week at the Cohasset and Hingham Community Centers.

The Hull resident, a professor at Mount Ida College in Newton, takes a class once a week to get a glimpse at the methods other certified instructors use. They also offer a nice break from teaching a class.

"I try to take one a week to keep fresh," said Butera, just minutes after her second class of the day let out. "It's a good chance to pick up new ideas." She paused for a moment, then said with a laugh, "It's nice to let someone else count to eight."

Butera is a bundle of enthusiastic energy who runs an upbeat, lively class to keep the hour-long session as fun as possible. The 20-member class, made up predominantly of women, follow Butera's every step like a finely-tuned machine. looking like fine-tuned synchronized unit.

Butera has seen aerobics evolve from what she called "running exercise" done to records, to tapes with funkier music.

"Now everything is to the beat," she said.

Butera completed her undergraduate work at Cortlandt State in New York and achieved her P.h.d. in Physical Education and Recreation at Boston University. An avid runner during her college years, Butera was an accomplished marathoner. She ran and finished the Boston Marathon every year from 1978-88 and

Three locals picked in marathon lottery

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

Three Cohasset runners hit the lottery jackpot on July 10. But instead of cashing in on new-found wealth, they'll be lacing up their Nikes, stretching and packing in the miles.

Kurt Devries, Jane Lanzillotti and Matthew Steele were among the 2,000 entrants picked in the first of three lottery drawings for the Open Division of the 100th running of the Boston Marathon next April.

The names were picked from a pool of 15,377 runners who have not met the marathon's qualifying time. So far, 1,243 runners have officially qualified and submitted their entry forms.

Those who were not selected will have their names put back in the pool. Two more drawings will be made on October 10 and January 10, 1996. Boston Athletic Association (BAA) officials expect at least 25,000-30,000 runners to gather for the 26.2-mile Patriot's Day race from Hopkinton to the Prudential Center. The race was first run in 1897, making it the oldest in the United States.

Of the 2,000 runners selected in the first lottery 1495 were male and 505, female. Massachusetts residents filled 491 of the slots

"I'm really excited about this," said the 42-year-old Lanzillotti, who found out she'll be on the starting line wearing a number next April. "I've always wanted to run Boston."

Lanzillotti, a nutritionist at the South Shore Hospital and consultant to the L-Street Running Club, said she had been training for the October 8, Twin Cities Marathon in St. Paul, Minnesota, in the hopes of officially qualifying for Boston. She had worked her weekly long run up to 15 miles while pounding out 5-6 miles per day the rest of the week.

Unfortunately, a recent shin splint injury has slowed Lanzillotti's training to the point where she is skeptical she'll be ready to run the 3 hour 40 minutes time needed to qualify for the event, if she is able to run it all.

"I thought they were better but tonight I went out and they were sore so I only ran two miles," Lanzillotti said.

As happy as she is at having won a number, Lanzillotti does admit she'd rather gain entry into the race by qualify-

'Offended' field hockey players offer challenge

To Mr. Joe Reardon:

We are writing this letter in response to the Extra Points column in the July 5 edition of the Marshfield Mariner. You wrote a list of articles that you probably won't be writing about. We realize that list was meant to amuse the readers; however, we were less than amused when one of the topics was "Sleeping In: A Week at Field Hockey Camp." As field hockey players, we were very offended by your views of field hockey. It seems to us that in your article, you were implying that field hockey is not a very physically demanding sport. Between the two of us, we have played basketball, tennis, softball and soccer, in addition to field hockey, and we both agree that field hockey is one of the most intense sports we have competed in. Also, the game of field hockey is hardly boring. To prove the fact that field hockey is a physically demanding and exciting sport, we are challenging you to come play in a game with us this summer. We are also extending this challenge to your fellow sportswriter, Dave McKee. We'll even provide you with a team to play with, comprised of other Marshfield High School field hockey players. So feel free to respond to our challenge — unless, of course, you're not conditioned enough for this physically demanding sport.

Most Sincerely,

Everyone loves to be outside running around during the summer.

But when the weather gets too hot, things can get a bit sticky.

Over the weekend, the Bay State Games were held at various sites around the state. (For those unfamiliar, the Bay State Games is the biggest summer amateur competition for high school and college age student-athletes.)

And while a few of the competitions were held inside (like hockey and basketball) many of the more popular events (soccer and lacrosse) were held outside in the sweltering heat.

I don't know about you, but running around chasing a soccer ball for two hours in 100 degree weather just doesn't sound like fun.

Thankfully, the Bay State organizers understand the dangers of playing sports in the hot sun and numerous cold fluids as well as medical personnel were at each site.

However, there are many weekend warrior athletes who haven't been using their heads during the hot weather.

I saw a few people (including President Bill Clinton) out jogging during the peak sun hours.

While jogging is great exercise, caution must be used during extreme heat. If you have to exercise, do it as late in the afternoon as possible and don't be shy about bringing along plenty of cold fluids.

Remember that old phrase- "It's always fun until someone drops dead from heat stroke."

I experienced the hot weather firsthand when I went golfing Friday afternoon with a few friends.

I wore shorts, a light T-shirt and a hat to block out the sun. I also brought along a huge thermos of lemonade and a towel to dry the sweat. I thought I would be okay.

But even with all that preparation, the 100 degree heat was wearing me out.

By the back nine, I was running on fumes. I didn't care where my shots were going and I was wearing the towel on my head like Lawrence of Arabia.

Needless to say, my golf game was anemic.

In hindsight, I probably should have cancelled the tee time and hung out in some air conditioned place.

But when you have the urge to go out and have some fun, your judgement sometimes gets a bit hazy.

I won't make that mistake again.

Cohasset pitcher Kellie Straughn delivers a pitch as Maureen Equi looks on in the background during recent 12-and-under softball tourney play.

Softballers stalled by South Randolph

"We don't play with Barbie dolls.
We just play with bats and balls.
We don't wear no mini skirts.
We just wear our softball shirts.
We don't paint our nails bright red...."

The North Randolph team's chants were loud and long last week, and it took extra concentration by Cohasset's 12 and under girls' softball team to ignore the noise. Noise, however, was the least of the team's worries as they moved on to confront a powerhouse club drawn from two Little Leagues, South Randolph and Braintree National, in a three-game series.

The first game, played at South Randolph, was close into the fourth inning with some terrific defensive plays at second base and shortstop from Megan Cox and Sarah Motley. Cohasset's 3-2 lead after 3 was demolished as SR/BN cranked up a potent offense that powered across 17 runs before the game ended, resulting in a 19-4 loss for the girls in blue.

Play moved to Braintree National's home field on the day the thermostat reached 100 for the first time in 18 years. Maureen Equi moved to catcher and Beth Smoot to pitcher. Equi was outstanding behind the plate. Her perseverance in unbearable heat inspired a solid defensive performance by Cohasset.

Smoot faced 20 batters without conceding a walk until the fifth inning, when she yielded one to a feisty opponent nicknamed the "Jellybean." Smoot struck out four and put down the side in order in the first and third innings while allowing one hit in the second. Andi Shaughnessy combined with Megan Cox for the play of the game when Shaughnessy gunned down a runner at second base on a beautiful throw to Cox. Abby Murphy was terrific at third base. She nailed a runner at first in the third inning after making a terrific stop on a hard hit ground ball. After three innings Cohasset held a 1-0 lead. Once again SR/BN rallied in the second half of the game to record their second straight victory 8-2.

Determined to salvage one game of the series, Cohasset played its best game of the season before the home crowd on Saturday. The Blues came away with a 12-11 victory over the stunned SR/BN squad. Kellie Straughn pitched superbly and had four hits in four at bats, scoring four times. Abby Murphy and Maureen Equi each had three hits and scored three times while Beth Smoot and Clara Sceery had two hits apiece.

Sarah Donovan made the defensive play of the game when she grabbed a sinking line drive to left field. She, Kristin Devine, and Courtney Anton played good fundamental softball in the outfield. Devine's speed was especially impressive.

The dramatic moment of the game belonged to Courtney Anton, Clara Sceery, and Kellie Straughn. Cohasset came to bat in the last inning with the score tied 11-11. Straughn led off with a base hit. Sceery followed with a base hit, moving Straughn to third. Two strikes and several foul balls later, Anton drove Straughn home with the winning run. Straughn's aggressive base running and a picture perfect slide at home plate sealed the victory.

Cohasset plays North Randolph Friday at the high school field. Bring earplugs.

Williamsport squad continues winning ways

By Bob Moody
Special to the Mariner

The 14- to 15-year-old program is going strong in the Williamsport tournament. With a record of 4-1 the team will face Abington in the semifinals of district 8 and 9.

The team consisting of Rob Moody, Justin Golden, Greg Taylor, Matt Lewis, Ben Smoot, Ben Ketchum, Alex Swherin, J.P. Laugelle, Mike Rossi, Eric Hanian, Rich Harrington and Ben Roine, has played very well. Each player is to be commended for its fine play during this tournament. Every player has been able to get the job done when called upon.

The coaches Paul St. John, Bill Ketchum and Mark Swherin are also to be commended for making the program successful.

Cohasset is being well represented in this tournament by these boys. The caliber of ball being played is second to none. Please try to support this team by attending one of its games.

Three picked in marathon lottery ing.

"In my heart, I'd have to say I'd rather be a qualified runner because Boston is such a unique race," Lanzillotti said. "But now that I know I'm in it takes the pressure off."

Ironically, Lanzillotti was injured while training and missed the former Newton Garden City Marathon when she was 29. She had to stop running for two months. When Lanzillotti returned to the roads she proceeded to break an ankle at the end of a 10-mile run.

She spent her 30s running in shorter road races. Lanzillotti said several members of the L-Street club talked her into sending in an application for the '96 Boston.

"I just decided it's now or never and I'm going to go for it," she said.

Steele learned that his name came up in the lottery when a friend of his faxed him a page of the Boston Herald which listed the New England qualifiers.

"I was thrilled," said the 39-year-old Steele, who ran Boston unofficially in '92. "I just found out a little while ago. I normally don't have this kind of luck. I never thought I'd make it so I really didn't look."

Steele has currently been running less than 15 miles per week and pretty much limits his racing to the enormously popular Cohasset and Hingham road races. His plan of attack is to "gear up after Thanksgiving" for the race and steadily increase his training to the point where he is running 28 miles per week. The distance may not sound like much to many runners, but Steele is more concerned about avoiding injuries. He also believes it is an adequate distance. Steele finished his previous Boston with the same training.

"It kind of forces you to do the training," Steele said. "The big balancing act is not injuring your body. I'll be pretty certain I can do it."

Devries received his confirmation letter in the mail on Friday. Like both Steele and Lanzillotti, the 35-year-old Devries admitted being selected in the lottery "takes some pressure of you," but he still fully intends to run the Marine Corp Marathon during the last week in October in Washington D.C.

"I'm still going to do it because I want to get into the qualified field," said Devries.

Running to raise money for the Dana Farber Cancer Institute, Devries competed at Boston in both '93 and '94. He finished in 4:02 in his first run and then took nearly 30 minutes of his time in '94 when he crossed the finish line in 3:33.

Devries recently joined a track club in Cambridge and his training is moving along smoothly. But with the enormous field, he's not counting on a personal-best time.

"It's not going to be a fast marathon because of the number of runners," Devries said. "But there's nothing like Boston. The crowd's great all 26 miles."

If anyone would like to make a donation to the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, which Devries said he is running to raise money for again this year, make out a check to Dana Farber. The mailing address is Kurt Devries, Box 93, Cohasset, MA 02025.

set her personal best of 3:03 in '79, the year Bill Rodgers set his personal best as well. Butera found the entire running scene in Boston electrifying after moving to Newton.

"My running took off once I came to Boston," Butera said.

But Butera realized she had to make a choice. Whichever of the two activities she picked, she wanted to pour her physical and mental energy into it. Butera knew she'd be spreading herself too thin if she attempted an all-out comittment to both. Butera made a decision.

"This (aerobics) was really up and coming," Butera said. "I couldn't do both equally well so I decided to stick with the aerobics."

Butera believes aerobics is an excellent physical activity because those in the class can go at their own pace, depending on their fitness and how they are feeling on that particular day. An hour of aerobic activity burns 500 calories, but that figure, Butera pointed out, can fluctuate greatly.

"Every class is what you put into it," she said. "That's why I like bigger class because people come and do their own thing. You really have to be a motivator."

During her aerobics classes, Butera likes to incorporate resistance work with light hand weights. Because women have physically weaker upper bodies as compared to men, she finds it important to add the weight work for a more well-rounded workout.

"I try to include strength work in every class," she said.

Aerobics not only serves an important fitness benefit but a mental one as well. Like running, it can help the body release chemicals which produce a natural and help relieve stress.

"The overall benefits outweigh the caloric thing," Butera said. "Your metabolism increases and you burn more calories at rest. I think the mental attitude is big. Everyone feels better when they leave. It's a big stress release and I think a lot of my students use it for that."

Butera is amazed when she sees how fit some of the members of senior class are and says there has been a rise of the amount of people in that category doing aerobics on a regular basis. The classes center more on low impact and the music is made up mainly of big band and country step.

Aerobics, though, has yet to attract a large male following. Butera has the impression men are intimidated by what they perceive to be a dance class.

"There aren't as many (men) as you'd like to see," she said. "I try to keep the classes athletic. I think if they come with a friend and see it isn't dance but real work they'd see the results and benefits."

The real satisfaction of her work though comes from the students themselves and the progress they have made.

"It's seeing past students who say they're still doing aerobics," Butera said. "It's getting people turned on to fitness and incorporating it into their daily lives.

"The little success stories are really what keep you going."

Rangers repeat as Little League champions

By Bob Moody
Special to the Mariner

Finishing the season undefeated, the Rangers continued their winning ways in the playoffs. The championship came at the hands of the Dodgers. The Dodgers finished the season strong, but proved to be no match for the Rangers. The Rangers, led by veterans Doug O'Brien, Eric Shea, Mickey Palone, Chris Caron, Will Moody and Craig Davis, supplied the leadership and offensive power necessary to repeat as champions.

The veterans will be missed next year, but with Greg O'Connell, Eric Libby, Evan Pestone, Jeremy Tedeschi, Matt O'Grodnik and Brendan Goff returning, the Rangers will be ready to defend their championship and continue their winning ways.

Coaches Jon Caron and Emmitt O'Brien are to be commended for their dedication to the league and to the success of the Rangers.

In the first swim meets of the season, the Scituate Knights of Columbus team showed surprising strength across all age groups, defeating an undermanned Duxbury team, 307-154.

First place finishers included Heather Walden (4), Caitlin Foley (4), and Katie Fitzgerald (3) for the 12 and under team.

Not to be outdone, Katie Driscoll (3) and Morgan Bowling (2) led a very deep 8 and under team.

Coach Beth Dunn said, "It was truly a team victory with all swimmers putting forth a great effort."

Duxbury was led by the Biggs brothers; Patrick (2) and P.J. (2), but it was not enough to challenge the strong Scituate team.

A bit of controversy arose within the Scituate team when the Scituate girls defeated the Scituate boys in the 200-yard relay for the 16 and under team. Led by the Murphy sisters, they broke the club record and beat the boys by two seconds. The boys indicated it is a long season; stay tuned.

Hansen earns lacrosse honors

Tucker Hansen, a Denison University graduate from Cohasset, earned his fourth varsity letter with the DU men's lacrosse team. The 1991 graduate of Belmont Hill School contributed to Denison's success as a midfielder on the Big Red varsity squad. Based on his performance throughout the 1995 season, he was an All-North Coast Athletic Conference first-team selection. Following the Big Red's contests against Wooster and Ohio Wesleyan, Hansen was named Denison's Player Of The Game. Hansen was a history major at Denison.

Under the guidance of fifth-year head coach Mike Caravana, Denison finished the 1995 campaign with an 8-5 overall record, but each of their losses came against teams ranked in the top-ten nationally. The Big Red finished second in the highly regarded North Coast Athletic Conference and ranked 12th among the nation's Division 3 programs.

Police status report for June

In his June status report to selectmen, Police Chief Brian Noonan said the department made a total of 19 arrests during the month. Five of the arrests were for outstanding warrants, four for operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol, one for operating a motorboat while under the influence of alcohol, two for domestic violence violations, two for minors transporting alcohol, one for shoplifting, one for operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license, two for protective custody, and one for possession of a Class D substance.

Noonan said there were four "breaking and enterings," three at residences and one at a business.

"Although the amount of breaking and enterings is rather small compared to surrounding towns, I am still very concerned and ask all residents to report immediately anything of a suspicious nature," he said.

"If you think a crime may be in progress, call 9-1-1."

Noonan said the Enhanced 9-1-1 system was on line June 7 and all calls are being answered by civilian dispatcher. In June, Cohasset received seventy 9-1-1 calls.

Det. Richard Grassie and Noonan attended a luncheon at the senior center to educate seniors about 9-1-1. P.A.L.S. Officer Lisa Matos handed out information packets and showed a 9-1-1 educational video to more than 500 children at the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools.

On June 15, Cohasset's new civilian dispatchers received eight hours of training on suicide prevention, Noonan said. The training was provided free of charge by the Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council at the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island.

The Grand Tour — with Ginger Ferenz, 383-2863

This pale-grey Colonial-style home on Nichols Road is all dressed up for summertime. The beautiful white railings surrounding a wrap-around porch sparkle in the afternoon sunlight. Baskets of pale pink flowers hang above the railings while the American flag gently moves in the warm breeze. This lovely porch conjures up memories of slow, hot and hazy summer days spent reading, relaxing or simply listening to the Red Sox on the old Motorola while enjoying a glass of lemonade or a catnap.

Remembered for town volunteer efforts

Rev. Edward Atkinson, 60, dies of heart attack

By Charlene Vandini
Mariner staff

Rev. Edward T. Atkinson, minister of the First Parish in Cohasset for more than a quarter century, died suddenly Monday at Melrose-Wakefield Hospital of a massive heart attack. He was 60 years old.

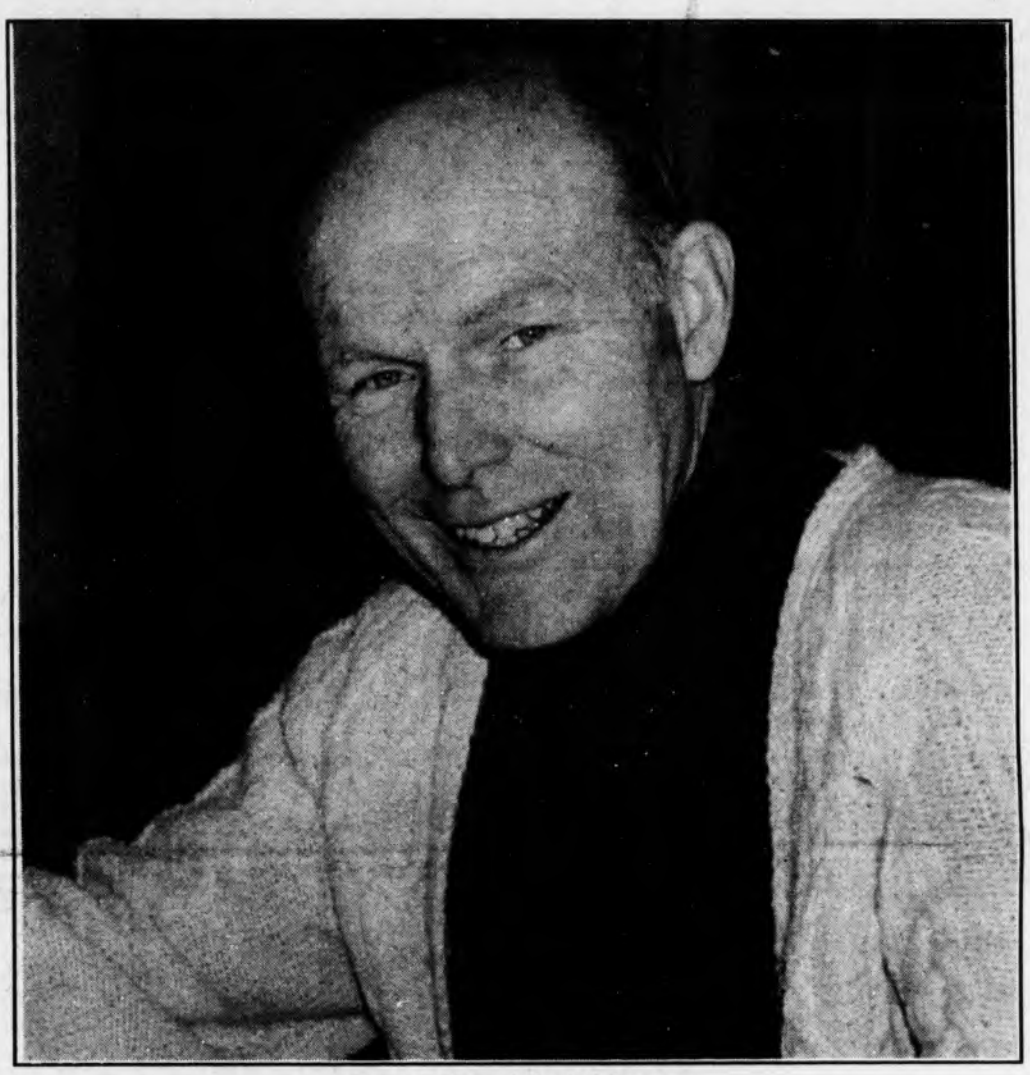
Rev. Atkinson and his wife were returning to Cohasset Monday afternoon when their car was involved in a minor accident. Both vehicles had pulled over to the side of the road when he lost consciousness after leaving the car to speak with the other driver.

When he arrived in Cohasset in 1969, Atkinson not only embraced his duties at the First Parish, he also embraced the community as a whole, volunteering in many capacities.

Iri Bloomfield, who served on the search committee that brought Atkinson to town, noted his many activities, including his tenure as vice president of the Cohasset Parent-School Organization, trustee of the Paul Pratt Public Library, commodore of the Cohasset Sailing Club, chairman of the Council on Aging, and chairman of the Cohasset METCO program.

"He probably knew everyone in town," she said.

She credits Rev. Atkinson, who she called an "unpretentious man," with fostering the close-knit congregation of the First Parish, which has approximately 250 members. His sermons brought people into the church and kept them there, she said, adding, many new young families have begun to participate in services, the church school, and youth programs.



Rev. Edward T. Atkinson

Bloomfield said that when the six-member search committee first heard Rev. Atkinson speak during services at another church, they knew immediately that he was their choice to fill the vacancy at the First Parish.

She recalled that shortly after his arrival in Cohasset, Rev. Atkinson built himself a sailboat in the garage of the parsonage. Friends who sailed with him noted its superb construction, which was a testimony to the Bachelor of Architecture degree he earned from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1957.

From 1958 to 1961, Rev. Atkinson served as an air intelligence officer and information and education officer in the United States Navy.

He received his Bachelor of Divinity from the Crane Theological School at Tufts University, and, in 1964, a Masters of Sacred Theology.

Three years ago, with his wife Sally, Rev. Atkinson enjoyed a sabbatical which he spent travelling around the country, spending time in the Southwest and Pacific Northwest. But, Bloomfield said, he happily returned to Cohasset, and

Former Merchant Marine chosen as new harbormaster

By Charlene Vandini
Mariner staff

John H. Winters III, a former Merchant Marine, has been appointed harbormaster to fill the vacancy created by the recent resignation of Shawn Kelly.

Kelly quit, effective July 1, citing a lack of support from the selectmen, what he termed the board's "micro-management" of the position.

While Kelly gave the town almost a month's notice, his resignation left Cohasset without a harbormaster during the busiest month of the boating season, especially over the July 4th holiday.

Winters, 52, was one of three candidates interviewed by selectmen last week. A Vietnam veteran and lobsterman, Winters now operates his own woodworking business.

Winters said he would be able to deal with the boating public and work with the board and the executive secretary.

"I feel I have the disposition [for diplomacy]," he said.

He also said that Cohasset did not need a new harbormaster's boat, as Kelly had requested to compensate for the future closing of the Scituate Coast Guard station.

"Why should Cohasset come up with a $50,000 boat to subsidize the Coast Guard?" Winters said during his interview.

'James Brook' sewer plan described as controllable

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner staff

The sewer commission chairman is backing an intown environmental sewer option as the one with most town control and the most affordable of the three plans.

The sewer commission held a public information meeting Wednesday night to discuss the pros and cons of three sewer options under consideration for the town.

Under a "court agreement for judgement" by the state, Cohasset must develop an approved sewer system for approximately one third of the town or about 650 homes and that system must be operational by April 1, 1999.

The three alternatives studied by Tutela Engineering Associates, Inc. of Wilmington include the installation of sewer lines and connecting them to the Hull Treatment facility. The second alternative is upgrading Cohasset's waste water treatment plant (WWTP) and maintaining the existing discharge into James Brook by improving the quality of the discharge. The third alternative is upgrading the WWTP with a discharge into Cohasset Harbor.

The James Brook option is the most desirable and most affordable, said Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild.

Officials asked to back landfill moratorium

By Sarah R. Coffey
Mariner correspondent

Selectmen will ask state environmental officials to implement a moratorium on approving new landfill space until a new solid waste master plan for the state is finished.

The Comprehensive Site Assessment (CSA) for Cohasset Heights Landfill was reviewed last week at the health board meeting, attended by selectmen and conservation commission members.

Comments were heard questioning the need for landfill expansion, future impact to Lily Pond and if any conclusive testing results will ever be found.

Opponents to the plan said the CSA report does not sufficiently describe the surface water and groundwater impact to the landfill.

Through the report, owners of the privately owned landfill hope to obtain state environmental approval which could move the expansion process out of the study stage.

CHL, located off of 3A, proposes expanding its facility into 27.5 acres including landfill, recycling and materials processing operations.

The state Dept. of Environmental Protection has 60 to 90 days to review the CSA and the state Mas. Environmental Police Act (MEPA) has 30 days.

If the CSA is approved, the proposed CHS expansion could move to the site assignment stage.

CHL wants to expand the landfill and add a Materials Recycling Facility to house conveyors, glass crushers, shredders and a bailing and storage area.

Also planned is a Materials Processing Operation to separate recyclable demolition waste from the material dis-

Overdue bills enforced

Overdue ambulance bills, totalling almost $4,300, will be turned over to a collection agency, selectmen said Monday night.

The board also authorized the agency, Credit Recovery Company of Burlington, to report the delinquents to a credit bureau so that the unpaid bills will appear on the individuals' credit records.

The town, through the fire department, has been able to collect 88 per cent of its ambulance bills each year.

Selectman Jane Goedecke said Monday that the overwhelming majority of the 14 unpaid ambulance bills are to non-residents. The charges were incurred when the Cohasset ambulance responded to mutual aid calls outside of town, or to accidents involving persons who live elsewhere.

"They don't think they'll ever get caught," she said.

Allowing the collection agency to report the unpaid bills to a credit bureau is the fair way to deal with the delinquents, she said. In approximately 20 cases where there is a financial hardship, she said, the town is accepting payment in installments. Some people are regularly paying $5 each month.

When some people make an effort to pay the ambulance bill, it is not equitable to allow others to ignore their obligations, Goedecke explained.

The board also voted to write-off $3,100 in unpaid ambulance bills.

Goedecke explained that in some cases, the town received only partial payment because the actual ambulance charge exceeded the maximum amount allowed by Medicare or workers compensation.

Hedlund seeks Title V revisions

State Sen. Robert Hedlund is working to revise recently enacted strict regulations of septic systems.

The proposed revisions to Title V regulations have been sent to the state Dept. of Environmental Protection, and a response is expected within two weeks, Hedlund said Monday.

Speaking with Cohasset selectmen, Hedlund said that he, along with other Republican state legislators, has proposed 10 changes that will protect groundwater while providing some measure of relief for homeowners who are have found their septic systems in violation of the new Title V regulations.

Among the changes proposed is a new category for septic systems which while not conforming to the regulations, are determined to be environmentally effective.

In addition, any septic system installed or inspected within 24 months prior to the new Title V regulations would not require an additional inspection if offered for sale during that time.

The revisions also call for creation of a technical review board to investigate alternative technologies for septic systems, and make recommendations to the Dept. of Environmental Protection.

Hedlund said he is also backing tax relief legislation that will allow a one-time $2,500 tax credit for property owners who must replace septic systems to comply with the Title V regulations.

Red Lion Inn sale unclear

The sale of the Red Lion Inn does not look promising, an attorney for the prospective buyer said this week.

John McLaughlin, representing Arthur Smith of Weston, said his client was unable to obtain financing by the deadline set in the purchase-and-sale agreement.

"I can't say it's dead, but it doesn't look good," McLaughlin said, adding that negotiations are continuing outside of the agreement.

Earlier this month, selectmen approved the liquor license transfer to Smith, subject his to providing the board with additional information concerning the financing.

McLaughlin said he notified the board this week that the sale is not going through as expected, and asked to withdraw his client's application for the license transfer.

Smith told selectmen that he planned $150,000 to $200,000 in renovations to the nearly 300-year-old Cohasset Village landmark.

With the sale now in question, the town is no closer to receiving payment of back taxes and overdue sewer bills, which would have been paid at the time of the sale.

Unpaid real estate taxes and sewer charges for 1995 total more than $35,000. For 1992 through 1994, $47,837 remains delinquent for real estate taxes, water and sewer charges, and accumulated interest.

Parking stickers available

The Cohasset Recreation Department still has parking stickers available for residents. The stickers, which are valid for Sandy Beach, Government Island and Parker Avenue boat ramp, will be on sale through the summer.

As of Monday, July 17, stickers are issued only on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to noon.

Salt House reapplies for liquor license

Two years after he was turned down for a liquor license, Tom Eisenstadt, owner of the Old Salt House restaurant, is asking again, and this time volunteered to add conditions to the license.

Selectmen took the application under advisement and expect to vote at their meeting Aug. 7.

Eisenstadt's attorney Carolyn Conway told the selectmen Monday her client is willing to restrict beer and wine sales to customers who are seated at tables in the restaurant and ordering meals with the alcoholic beverages.

The restaurant caters to family diners, Conway said, and Eisenstadt has no desire to change that atmosphere. He is requesting the beer and wine license only to offer his customers a wider choice of beverages to enjoy with their meals.

"Having a beer isn't going to be the reason to go to the Old Salt House," she said.

Conway presented the board with copies of petitions signed by many restaurant customers who support Eisenstadt's application. While the board said it had received one letter from a resident who opposes the license, four residents spoke in support of it.

Bancroft Road resident Jim McCarthy expressed his confidence that Eisenstadt, a former Suffolk County Sheriff and chairman of the Boston School Committee, is competent to have a beer and wine license.

John Conroy of Atlantic Avenue added that the selectmen have a right to revoke the license if Eisenstadt fails to comply with the conditions he has suggested.

When the first application was denied, selectmen said they were concerned that customers could walk away with beer, possibly taking it to under age persons.

To prevent this from occurring, Conway said the waiters and waitresses will be trained to check identification and to refuse sales to persons who may have had too much to drink. In addition, beer and wine will be served only in glasses and cups with meals, she said.

In reference to boaters who may take beer or wine with them onto their boats, Eisenstadt said of the eight nearby boat slips, six are leased, leaving only two for customers.

In response to a question from Selectman Jane Goedecke, Eisenstadt said the restaurant is not for sale. He explained that he has recently moved outside of Cohasset, which prompted speculation he planned to sell the business, but has no plans to do so.

Conway said that the restaurant's hours would remain the same, from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. on Thursdays through Saturdays, and closing an hour earlier on Tuesdays and Wednesdays. She said the state Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission would not object to the restaurant's custom of closing earlier when business is slow due to inclement weather.

Civil Service list requested

At the request of Police Chief Brian Noonan, selectmen will request a Civil Service list with local preference to hire a new police officer, and to promote an officer to sergeant.

This action was prompted by the recent retirement of Sgt. Richard Abbadessa.

Noonan said a police training academy is not likely to be scheduled until September or October, but he wants to begin the process of filling the vacancies in the department.

In a related matter, selectmen recommended a $19,549 transfer from the reserve fund to buy back accumulated unused sick time from Abbadessa who retired July 7.

Former Merchant Marine chosen as new harbormaster

Winters also told the board he would be available to work as needed during winter months for rescue missions.

The availability of the harbormaster during the winter was a point of contention between Kelly and selectmen.

Contacted during Monday's selectmen's meeting, Winters' wife said he would be able to start immediately.

Selectmen were anxious to have the job filled before the weekend.

Selectmen also interviewed two other candidates for the harbormaster's post: Tom Wigmore and John Cotter.

'I feel I have the disposition for diplomacy.

- New Harbormaster John H. Winters III.

Wigmore, an assistant harbormaster, was first appointed to that position in 1982, at the age of 17, making him the youngest in the state. Since that time, he has attended the Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council program. While he favored the purchase of a new harbormaster's boat, he told selectmen that a less expensive model would be satisfactory.

Cotter, 32, is in the process of moving from Buffalo, New York to Hingham. He has a 200-ton cap[illegible]'s license from the Coast Guard and a degree in geography from the University of Washington in Seattle. He has spent time over the last few years in Saipan in the South Pacific.

Chairman backs 'James Brook' sewer plan as controllable nothing will change," said Guild. He noted while there will be more liquid discharged, the discharge will be the same good quality with a new, state of the art treatment system.

However, while favoring one plan Guild stressed it is only his recommendation and wants all resident input before filing a written report to state officials.

By keeping the system intown, Cohasset will have more control of the system and save money, he said.

A summary of estimated annual costs to residents showed that over 20 years, taxpayers who reside in an average Cohasset home assessed at 242,000 would pay an additional $115 each year for the James Brook option, $122 for the Cohasset Harbor alternative, $304 for the Hull connection and up to $1,056 for town wide sewering.

The cost for residents who already have the sewer would be $491 for James Brook; $515 for Cohasset Harbor; $807 for the Hull connection and $599 for town-wide sewering annualiy. For residents who will become new sewer users those costs annually would be $880, $904, $1195 and $863.

So far, only the Hull hook-up plan has been approved by the state. But Guild hopes to get some positive feedback from the state on the other two options when it has reviewed the town's Interim Draft Evaluation of the alternatives.

Guild expects that few residents will like the Hull option. "It's too expensive and we'll lose control," he said.

Based on the treatment of 300,000 gallons per day, the total cost estimate for the James Brook discharge and WWTP upgrade including capital and engineering costs would be $2,223,200. At $9,243,800 the Hull hook up would be more than four times as costly. The cost for Cohasset Harbor discharge and upgrading the WWTP would be $3,093,200.

However, while favoring one plan Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild stressed it is only his recommendation and wants all resident input before a final decision is reached.

The above three options would sewer between 30 and 35 percent of the town, Guild said, noting that major portions of the project could be up to 75 percent state funded.

For those who wonder about the cost of sewering all of Cohasset, the Tutela cost summary shows that town-wide sewers providing 80 percent coverage with the new WWTP would cost more than $45 million.

In addition to sewering the densely populated center of town, Guild maintained the long troubled Straits Pond area must also be addressed.

Guild described the pond as a huge, natural evaporating pan, one mile long and 1/2 mile wide with very little water flowing in and out. Nitrates and phosphates produced by septic systems adjacent to the pond encourage the growth of weeds that can choke off the pond, he said.

The Hull connection is the best solution for Straits Pond residents, he said, but noted that no decision has been made yet

"The only certainty is that we must do something," said Guild, adding "we have 10 months to work on this. We have a long time to evolve."

Cohasset's interest in an interconnection with Hull is part of what could become a tri-town project with Hingham and Hull. Hingham is looking to solve the problem of failed or failing septic systems leaching into the Weir River in the Bonnie Brier neighborhood by connecting the Weir River Watershed Area to the Hull plant.

All of these costs, except for those for existing users would rise with the addition of a separate Straits Pond solution and the final cost allocation method will be submitted to town meeting for approval or amendment at a later date, the report said.

Guild hopes to get some good feed back from the town on this important issue.

"We want to know what problems people foresee and see if we can deal with them," Guild said.

"This is the biggest project the town has ever done," he added.

State aid, assessments rise

Cohasset's share of state aid for fiscal year 1996 is up to $1.36 million, but its assessments for state services has also increased, to $445,000.

The $916,000 net result for FY 1996 includes $634,000 in Chapter 70 education aid to the town.

Last year, Cohasset's share of the state aid pie was $861,000.

Of the total money returned, Cohasset will receive $262,575 from the state lottery, an increase of $29,000. But aid for school transportation and school construction decreased by a total of $50,262 from the previous year.

The assessment for the MBTA is virtually unchanged, with just over $153,000 charged. The state has increased Cohasset's payment for retired teachers health insurance by $9,200, bringing the new total to $209,000.

Historical Wilson House transformed into 1920s tea house

By James Loewenstein
Mariner correspondent

Cohasset's Captain John Wilson House, a two-story Elm Street building, originally home to a fishing boat captain in 1810, has since had numerous other uses such as a candy shop, an ice cream parlor, a photographer's studio, and since 1936, a museum operated by the Cohasset Historical Society.

David Wadsworth, Historical Society curator, recently discovered that the building also housed a tea house during the 1920s. This summer, the Historical Society transformed the first floor of the building to recreate the ambiance of that tea house.

Almost all of the tables, chairs, place settings and china in the recreated "Mayfair Tea House" had originally come from other early Cohasset homes, Wadsworth said. Over the years, the artifacts had been donated to the Cohasset Historical Society, he said.

"Because this was a wealthy town, the ladies got dressed up and had high tea. It was a social gathering," said Mark McLaughlin, a Harvard graduate student from Cohasset who set up the exhibit as a final project for a course in exhibit design.

Displayed near the tables are several of the kind of fancy dresses the tea drinkers would have worn. "People got dressed up in their bonnets and promenaded through the street to high tea. It was proper etiquette for ladies to have tea," McLaughlin said. "They still have high tea at the Ritz-Carlton" in Boston, he said.

When the "Mayfair Tea House" existed, Cohasset was "quite a well-to-do summer colony," Wadsworth said.

Some patrons might have come from the many large summer houses on the shore which were built by wealthy Bostonians, mostly between 1870 and 1890, he said.

Permanent exhibit expanded

But that's not all that's new at the Capt. John Wilson House museum.

The permanent, second-floor exhibit, which recreates a Cohasset home from the 19th century, now has "many more things on display," said Mary Hartshorne, Society president.

In fact, the entire collection of the Wilson House is exhibited this summer, she said.

The material was taken out of storage because the Historical Society is attempting to identify and acquire information about many items in its collection, she said.

The unpacked artifacts have been incorporated into the permanent display, which illustrates aspects of Cohasset life during the formative years of the town, she said.

Most of the items in the permanent exhibit also came from early Cohasset homes, Wadsworth said. On display are antique toys, 19th century utensils for cooking and eating, cradles, a large spinning wheel, furniture and many other artifacts.

In the future, the collection will be exhibited on a rotating basis and fewer items will be displayed, Hartshorne said.

Very few items are being displayed for the first time, Wadsworth said.

Currently, most of the items displayed in the museum have no identifying label indicating what they are and where they came from.

The Historical Society has hired a curator from the Heritage Plantation in Sandwich, to create labels.

Hartshorne hopes that by next summer, all items on display will have a descriptive tag.

McLaughlin also completely rearranged the permanent exhibit, Wadsworth said.

For many years, probably decades, the exhibit had not changed much, he said.

Wadsworth said it is a "good thing" to rearrange an exhibit after a period of time because it can show a "new way of looking at things."

McLaughlin said he tried to set up the exhibit "so it looks like someone would actually have been living here."

The tea house exhibit will be displayed this summer only, Hartshorne said. The museum will be open Tuesday through Sunday, from 1:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m., through Labor Day.

The Wilson House is open only during the summer.

There is no admission charge to the Capt. John Wilson House and to the Society's Maritime Museum next door. However, donations are gratefully accepted.

The Historical Society currently has another small, temporary exhibit a few doors away from the Capt. John Wilson House.

In one of the front display windows at Goodale Insurance Co. on South Main Street, there are two mannequins dressed as a Cohasset couple from around 1910, and they appear to be going on a picnic.

The mannequins are wearing goggles and overcoats to protect them the dusty and dirty roads. "The back roads were not paved at the beginning of the 1900s," said Martha Hurtig, a member of the Historical Society.

The window display is a way to "expose people to what we have in the (Society's) collection," she said.

State officials asked to back new landfill moratorium posed at the landfill.

Bruce Haskell of Camp Dresser and McKee (CDM) presented a report of technical comments which focused on information pertaining to water quality and landfill gas.

CDM will prepare additional comments on the CSA report for submission to the state DEP office.

Haskell said the study report was found to have some flaws.

More description was needed to determine why acetone was written off at the site, Haskell said.

There was also only one round of tests done around Lily Pond. It is not known if contaminant has moved to the lower wetlands.

Selectman Peter J. Pratt is concerned about why the town has been paying for testing on the site for years without any conclusive answers, he said.

Haskell replied that the town may never get one definitive answer. Without putting a well every half a foot, there is no way to be totally precise, he said.

There is also much bedrock in the area, confusing testing. While an exact line where contaminant is can not be drawn, it can be determined that pollution hasn't reached a certain point, Haskell said.

John McNabb, a member of Stop Any Further Expansion, told health board board there was no further need for expansion, quoting the state DEP calculations printed in the June 29, 1995 Draft Update of the state Solid Waste Master Plan.

"There is sufficient capacity to handle all of the state's municipal waste over the next five years and its non municipal waste in 1996 and 1997."

McNabb also noted that expanding the landfill would discourage recycling statewide.

"Why does it make sense for the state to permit a landfill" that is unneeded, McNabb said.

Protecting the water supply is one thing but stopping expansion is another, said health board member Bob Davenport.

Pratt said Gov. William Weld should help clear up the situation and added Weld should make good on his offer to have a different approach to all landfill matters beginning as early as Aug. 1.

"The Town of Cohasset should get Weld to put his money where his mouth is."

The DEP will accept public comments on the CSA until Aug. 24, Written comments on the CSA should be sent to Thomas Mahin, Director of Solid Waste Management at DEP's New England Regional Office, 10 Commerce Way, Woburn, MA, 01801.

Summer reading encouraged at CJSH

Students at Cohasset Junior/Senior High School have received a summer reading list packet. Included are a parent letter, list of books appropriate for each grade level and a choice of journal response questions.

Students may earn extra credit toward their first-term fall English grade by reading two books from the list provided and by completing the journal responses for each book.

The summer reading program is voluntary, but parents are encouraged to provide opportunities for their children to read during the summer. Extra copies of the reading packets are available in the guidance office and the main office of Cohasset High School.

An unusual and exciting way to begin the week — a double wedding! Mr. and Mrs. Anthony C. Sestito are pleased to announce the engagements of their daughters, Dina. A. to Kurt F. Gondveer and Leanne M. to James A. Clark, Jr. Dina graduated from Cohasset High School and Quincy College and is office manager for the Cohasset Golf Club. Her fiancé, Kurt, is the son of Parker Gondveer of Weymouth and the late Janet M. Costello (Gondveer) of Hingham. He graduated from Norfolk County Agricultural School in Walpole and is employed by the Hingham Municipal Light Plant.

Leanne graduated from Cohasset High School and Cape Cod Community College and is employed by Carl E. Pipes, D.D.S., of Scituate, as a dental hygienist. Her fiancé, James, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Clark Sr. of Hingham. He graduated from Hingham High School and Wentworth Institute and is a self-employed electrician. An Oct. 14 double wedding is planned, and we hope to hear all about it, complete with photographs!

Congratulations to Sally Hamill of Cohasset fame, whose team won first place and a gold medal in the Bay State Games Juniors Basketball Division. The girls championship tournament was held July 13-16 between four divisional champions. She and her "Bay State Magic" teammates beat the "Running Rebels," an AUU team from Springfield, in the championship game (66-56) at Conte Forum to take the Gold! Sally is the starting guard on the championship team that went undefeated (8-0) throughout the Bay State Games. We certainly are in awe of you, Sally, and want to give you a standing 'O' for your efforts! Conte Forum will remember you! As will we all!

Rebecca A. Kirk, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James C. Kirk, has been named a College Scholar, the highest recognition for academic achievement, for the spring term at Middlebury College. That means a 3.5 average or better — great!

Nicole C. Greco has also attained dean's list status — the second-highest achievement, for the spring term at Middlebury College.

Cohasset surely grows the "cream of the crop," and Middlebury College knows good students when they see them! Don't forget Stephen M. Pozatek, son of Dr. and Mrs. Zigmunt W. Pozatek, who also attained dean's list status for the spring semester! Great news, everyone! You are dynamite!

Did you know that Ann Pompeo is a super organizer? Last month she held a family reunion for her husband, Roger's, side of the clan. This Sunday she did her side — all who were able to went and were so glad that they did! Everybody should have someone like Ann in their family. What fun! A memorable time indeed! I'm sure everyone's "thank you" cannot say enough!

The University of Massachusetts, Lowell sends us word that Paul M. Wilson received his B.S. in criminal justice — we salute you, Paul!

Curry College has accepted two of our finest residents! Megan Rhodes, Short St., who will major in nursing, played soccer and basketball at CHS and plans to play soccer at Curry. We will be watching with delight, Megan!

Sara Quemere, Talarico Lane, will be studying business. They are getting quite a gal! Sara also made her name by being involved in the yearbook, cheerleading, rowing and running track at CHS. Jeepers, Curry is lucky!

Happy Birthday greetings go to Clark Chatterton, whose birthday is this Saturday. All of you know what a special person he is. He loves doing for others! Be sure to give him a hug when you see him — he'll be glad! And not one moment older!

Speaking of truly special men, most of us will now know how to say good-bye to Father Keohane — what a gem! It never mattered what the church affiliation, he helped, he loved and he did for us! All we can do is wish him the best in his retirement and hope that he returns often to visit us! There is one question — he has promised so many people a postcard, who gets the first during his travels?

Director says heat helps kill stagnant water, mosquito breeding

That heat!

It might have been excruciating, but it has had its plusses, according to Ray Zucker, Assistant Supt. of the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project.

"It's good for us, bad for your lawns," he said, explaining that with the heat and extensive drought (there is a minus-eight inch drought level now, he said) there is not much stagnant water around where mosquitoes can breed.

Overall, PCMCP has recorded 2,688 fewer calls this year than at the same time last year.

But, don't get too excited, Zucker cautioned. PCMCP deals with from 30-40 species of mosquito from the beginning of spraying season (about Memorial Day) and, now that flood tides have peaked, the salt marsh mosquito is expected to breed and invade. "We might have problems with salt marsh mosquitoes in the coastal communities and along the North River so we're stepping up our larvaciding operations," he said. The salt marsh mosquito is, Zucker added, "an aggressive biter" (aren't they all?) and has been documented travelling 20-miles inland in a wind.

Last week, Norwell residents called the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project (PCMCP) with 546 requests to have their backyards sprayed. By way of comparison, there were only 342 requests recorded from Norwell residents during the week that ended June 23.

Norwell topped the last last week beating out Scituate which had 545 calls. There were 535 calls received from Hanover during the week that ended with July 14. PCMCP officials figure that the total number of calls for the week (648) averaged out to 130 each day.

Also in the 400-call range was Middleboro with 477.

Figures for other towns in the PCMCP area for the week that ended July 14 included: Abington, 155; Brockton, 191; Carver, 238; Cohasset, 90; Duxbury, 264; East Bridgewater, 106; Halifax, 122; Hanson, 199; Hingham, 177; Hull, 25; Kingston, 139; Lakeville, 164; Marion, 27; Marshfield, 476; Mattapoisett, 44; Pembroke, 304; Plymouth, 212; Plympton, 56; Rochester, 120; Rockland, 121; Wareham, 128; West Bridgewater, 131; Whitman, 42.

To have your yard sprayed, call PCMCP at 617-585-5450 or FAX them at 617-582-1276. You may also write to: PCMCP, PO Box 72, Kingston, 02364-0072. Don't forget (if writing or FAXing) to include your name, address, date you want the yard sprayed and telephone number.

Recycling made simple

Through a donation made by North Shore Recycled Fibers/The Newark Group, residents of Cohasset have recycling information at their fingertips 24 hours a day by dialing a recycling hotline (1-800-800-6881 or (617) RECYCLE.

A grant from NSRF, one of the state's leading recycling companies and a key provider of recycling services to the town, ensures that Cohasset's recycling message will remain part of a non-profit, statewide recycling hotline dubbed "E-Call." When Cohasset's zipcode is entered following a call to the hotline, a voice-mail message will be played, detailing Cohasset's latest recycling news.

Rev. Edward Atkinson. . .

told people that "everything he ever wanted was here."

Rev. Atkinson's love of music was evident when he played the accordion at senior citizen lunches, she said. He also played the piano by ear. He fulfilled a life-long dream last month, she said, when he organized and led a marching band at the town's Harborfest celebration.

Bloomfield noted the irony expressed by many friends who gathered at the parsonage Monday afternoon who recalled that memorial services performed by Rev. Atkinson always provided a sense of peace among the grieving.

He is survived by his wife Sally, three daughters, Sarah of Weymouth, Elizabeth Murphy of Hingham, and Julia Churchill of San Mateo, California, and a brother William of Darien, Connecticut.

A memorial service will be held at the First Parish in Cohasset at 4 p.m. Tuesday, Aug. 1. In lieu of flowers, contributions in his memory may be made to the First Parish in Cohasset, 23 Main Street, Cohasset, MA 02025.

A true 'Renaissance man'

Today, we are mourning the loss of Rev. Edward Atkinson, not only because he was a noted minister of First Parish in Cohasset but because he was a key figure and a non-elected leader in this community.

Former "Cohasset Mariner" Publisher David Cutler once urged all Mariner editors to seek out a clergy column in all communities because he believed these leaders of the religious community had something worthwhile to say. Rev. Atkinson was certainly such a man.

As former editor of the Cohasset Mariner, I first met Rev. Atkinson in the early 80s and what struck me was not only his knowledge of religion but his interest in community and worldly affairs.

It is no surprise to me that he is remembered as someone who not only embraced his duties at First Parish but someone who embraced the community as a whole, volunteering in many town efforts.

Iri Bloomfield, who served on the search committee that brought Rev. Atkinson to town, noted his many activities, including his tenure as vice president of the Cohasset Parent-School Organization, trustee of the Paul Pratt Public Library, commodore of the Cohasset Sailing Club, chairman of the Council on Aging, and chairman of the Cohasset METCO program.

"He probably knew everyone in town," she said.

She credits Rev. Atkinson, who she called an "unpretentious man," with fostering the close-knit congregation of the First Parish, which has approximately 250 members. His sermons brought people into the church and kept them there, she said, adding, many new young families have begun to participate in services, the church school, and youth programs.

Rev. Atkinson has been described as a "Renaissance man." His interests went beyond religion.

For example, Rev. Atkinson built himself a sailboat in the garage of the parsonage. Friends who sailed with him noted its superb construction, which was a testimony to the Bachelor of Architecture degree he earned from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1957.

From 1958 to 1961, Rev. Atkinson served as an air intelligence officer and information and education officer in the United States Navy.

Three years ago, with his wife Sally, Rev. Atkinson enjoyed a sabbatical which he spent travelling around the country, spending time in the Southwest and Pacific Northwest. But Rev. Atkinson was happy to return home and all that mattered to him was in Cohasset.

Bloomfield noted the irony expressed by many friends who gathered at the parsonage Monday afternoon who recalled that memorial services performed by Rev. Atkinson always provided a sense of peace among the grieving.

Cohasset lost one of its important leaders Monday and he will be difficult to replace from a religious and from a human aspect. His loss should cause every Cohasset resident to pause and reflect upon his accomplishments and his contributions to the community.

Rev. Atkinson appeared to look at life as a young man, preparing for the year, 2000. His picture on page one is how I will remember him.

Strong public opposition to CHL expansion

letters

To the Editor:

Thanks to all the people who attended the SAFE public hearing Sunday night on the proposed Area V expansion of the Cohasset Heights Ltd. landfill, and to the hundreds of people who sent in postcards, letters and comments on the CSA report filed by CHL before the commend deadline ended on Monday. Yet again we have shown that there is strong public opposition to the CHL expansion!

We can all do just one more thing to help stop the expansion. Write to Lt. Governor Paul Cellucci at the State House, Boston, MA 02133 (Fax #727-9725 today and ask him to ensure that any final MEPA certification (EOEA File #7223) for the expansion is contingent on final approval of the CSA by the Dept. of Environmental Protection. Since the CSA report they have filed does not sufficiently describe the surface water and groundwater pollution caused by the landfill, they should be required to do further study to document this extensive contamination! Your letter to Lt. Gov. Cellucci will do the most good if it is received by 5 p.m. Monday, July 31, the deadline for a decision on the CSA report by Environmental Affairs Secretary Trudy Coxe.

In your letter to Lt. Gov. Cellucci, also ask him to support a moratorium any new landfills and landfill expansions in Massachusetts until the draft Master Plan is finalized. The Cohasset Board of Selectmen, in their comment on the CSA, have called on the administration to support such a moratorium. According to the recently released draft state Solid Waste Master Plan, we have enough landfill capacity in Massachusetts to handle all the general refuse and trash we create for at least the next five years, so there clearly is no need for the CHL expansion, or any additional landfill capacity for general refuse for at least the next five years.

Some town officials and residents will be attending a DEP hearing in Lakeville next Monday on the Master Plan to urge DEP to include a landfill moratorium into the Master Plan. DEP will accept comments on the Master Plan by Aug. 14, when they will revise it to respond to the comments received. This is an opportunity for us to let the rest of the state know what we have been going through in fighting the proposed CHL expansion, and to put this issue to rest, finally, once and for all.

Heights could be Gateway to Cohasset

To the Editor:

History repeats itself! Cohasset Heights Ltd. has again chosen the dog days of summer to file its Comprehensive Site Assignment.

Approval of this document will get CHL one step closer to its 27.5-acre expansion of the landfill. This expansion will allow CHL to accept municipal solid waste (garbage) in addition to the construction and demolition debris that it accepts now. While the landfill is at the moment not discernible from Rt. 3A, expansion could result in a mound 200 feet high and quite visible from the road. Cohasset Heights would indeed be the Gateway to Cohasset!

Like the five previous EIRs, we have only 30 days to get the word out telling folks how important it is to write those comment letters. Believe it or not, they are read! The fact that CHL has been stalled in MEPA for so long is testimony to the effectiveness of these letters.

The proposed Solid Waste Master Plan guidelines call for permitting landfills based on certain criteria. One of these is how far along the proponent is in the permitting process. Let's not let CHL get to the next step without duly noted, resounding opposition from Cohasset's residents. What CHL wants most from us now is complacency!

Please write your letter soon. There are copies of the CSA available at the Paul Pratt Public Library and at the Board of Health Office. Admittedly, there is a fair amount of legalese required to ensure that the letters will be counted by the MEPA office.

Daytripping

by Laura Ricketson Doherty

There are so many different reasons for visiting Boston's North End that to suggest that these can be satisfied in one day is more than a bit optimistic.

Like the fine Italian cuisine for which it is noted, the area should be sampled with an open mind, carefully tasted and savored, "multo bene."

As a matter of fact, whether eating, buying or both, is definitely one of the main attractions of this Italian American section. Even residents who have lived there since birth will agree.

"The food shopping is great. And prices, much less than in gourmet shops, elsewhere," extolled one local lady I met during a recent visit. Her eyes lit up when she went on to describe the Italian sausages and many sauces available. And, the bakeries ... If I had let her continue, I'm sure I would still be there.

A recent lunch at Pomadoro on Hanover Street began with Di Lurisia Sparkling Water from the Piedmont Region of the Italian Alps. Freshly baked bread was served with a dish of olive oil on the side.

The antipasto I ordered was a big surprise. It started when the waiter placed a side dish of hot tomato sauce on the table. I thought about suggesting that there had been some sort of a mixup in my order but decided to wait.

The North End will do that to you. There are so many varied and intriguing experiences that you learn to leave yourself open to them.

So, I sat and watched as a large platter was served next. It was definitely not like any antipasto I had ever seen before. Hoping not to sound too much like the tourist I was, I told him so.

From his reaction, I was sure that I was not the first customer to remark on this. "Ah," he said, "but this is Pomadoro antipasto. It's Northern Italian served with our own creative flair."

To say it was delicious is a gross understatement. In it were batter-dipped, fried calimari (the tomato sauce was for dipping these), marinated mussels, scallops, shrimp, clams, eggplant, onions and artichokes.

The restaurant is known for traditional and creative cuisine, I was advised by a customer at the next table. "It's in the book," she said, holding up the ever-popular Fodor's. A tourist from Canada but born in Italy, she immediately set me straight on my American view of antipasto. It is an Italian dish but is definitely not a salad. It usually contains cold cuts, maybe some roasted peppers, but "never lettuce." To me that was like finding out that there is no pasta in spaghetti, no dough in pizza.

It was too warm for an espresso or cappuccíno at one of the many cafes in the area. But, there will always be another time.

Much of early American history took place in the North End. From his home there, Paul Revere made his historic ride to Lexington and Concord to warn of the approaching British. Afterwards used as a store and even tenement housing, his house has now been fully restored and is open daily.

Built in 1723 as a "house of prayer for all people," the Old North Church is Boston's oldest standing church. It was in its steeple that Robert Newman hung two lanterns to warn Charlestown that the British were coming. The story of his adventures is an intriguing one which you may want to look into during your visit.

The all brick Paul Revere Mall with its large fountain, tree-lined walkway and statue of America's famous patriot on horseback is a pleasant place to stop and rest. It leads to the Old St. Stephen's Church, an original Bulfinch design built in 1804. Its bell was cast by Paul Revere. Eventually acquired by the Archdiocese of Boston, it has served North End Catholics for more than a century. Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy was both baptized and buried from this church.

Another spot of historic interest is Copp's Hill Burying Ground, which has served as a cemetery since 1660. From it, the British fired their cannon at the patriots on Bunker Hill during the Revolutionary War.

There are so many intriguing shops in the North End but a special favorite of mine seems, at first, to me misplaced. For though the owner, Jim Anastasi, is Sicilian, his shop, the Thunderbird Gift Shop, at the water end of Hanover Street features Native American pottery, Kachina dolls, jewelry and artifacts. "I tell people we can't all sell macaroni and meatballs," he laughs.

Customers from all over the world find their way to his shop where items range in price from $5 to more than $3,000. All of his Kachina dolls are hand-carved from cottonwood, sacred to Native Americans, by artisans of the Navajo or Hopi tribes. Also featured are statues carved from alabaster or sandstone by Roland Behale. His works are currently on display at the White House, Anastasi notes.

Depression period furniture is available at the French Chef Omelette Pan on Salem Street. When asked about the confusing name for his shop, owner Vincent Zarrilli was much more interested in discussing the train issue on the South Shore.

He has spent thousands of hours on a proposal for both rail and motor cars to go from Logan Airport without going into downtown Boston.

Intent on clearing up the mystery of his shop's name, I watched in dismay as he left me alone to run to the copy shop, next door, in order to provide me with backup information.

He is the originator of a court case to enjoin the main part of the tunnel project from commencing until his alternative has been explored. Eventually, I was able to find out that Zarrilli used to sell pans and still keeps them available for customers, although he has changed to furniture. When I left, he was outside on the sidewalk sitting at one of his tables busily transcribing notes on legal stationery.

Not to be missed in the area walkway under the expressway are the works of the itinerant artist, Sidewalk Sam.

And, of course, there are the well-known festivals. Aug. 4 to 6 is the feast of St. Aggrippina Di Mineo, described on billboards as a beautiful blond princess who was unmercifully tortured to death in 256 A.D. As is customary in the land of her origin, a life-sized statue will be taken through the streets. It will be accompanied by the Roma Band of Boston. Many activities, including pony rides and concerts, are also planned.

Parking in the North End is always a challenge. Parking meters are available but rarely unoccupied. The best bet is one of the many parking lots. It is easier and less expensive to visit on weekends. Fridays and Saturdays, the Haymarket Produce Market is open where the careful shopper will be rewarded with incredible buys in fresh fruit and vegetables.

'Do the right thing and recycle'

To the Editor:

I wish everyone who reads this letter would — the next time they visit the Cohasset Transfer Station (dump) — stand for a minute after they dispose of their nonrecyclable general trash in the big dumpster and observe what others are throwing into that dumpster and we as citizens of Cohasset are paying to have taken away.

Cohasset does a lot of recycling, but to say that recycling is mandatory is a joke. Town employees of the transfer station say they are too busy or don't have the right to enforce recycling. So if people are interested in reducing what they pay for their dump stickers, they can help.

Please remind the people you see throwing corrugated cardboard, bottles, cans and newspapers into the big dumpster to do the right thing and recycle!

Wilson House open for season

The Cohasset Historical Society's Capt. John Wilson House, an 1810 sea captain's home, is open for the summer season. Located on Elm St., Cohasset Center, the Wilson House will be staffed each afternoon except Mondays by qualified young people trained to act as docents. The hours are 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. through Labor Day.

The early home, retaining many of the features of the original house, features on its first floor a representation of an early-20th-century tea house, a role in which it served during the decade of the 1920's, before becoming the Historical Society's first museum.

The second floor features artifacts characteristic of an early Cohasset home, most of which were donated to the Historical Society from other early homes in the town.

Built by housewright David Nichols and sold to Capt. John Wilson for $475, the Federal-style home remained in the Wilson family until 1912, when it was sold to Cohasset businessman William Hamilton McGaw. From then until 1936, when the house was given to the Historical Society by McGaw, it saw several different uses, including the "Mayfair Tea House." The ambiance of an early-20th-century tea room is replicated in this summer's first-floor setting.

The numerous artifacts upstairs in the house, which come from the Society's extensive collection, illustrate aspects of Cohasset life during the formative years of the town.

Admission to the Capt. Wilson House and the the Society's Maritime Museum next door is free, although donations are gratefully accepted. For further information contact the Historical Society at 383-1434.

With the regular season at an end many of the players are participating in traveling baseball programs. Cohasset has teams entered in eight-, nine-, 10-, 11- and 12-year-old programs. The cost is $35 per player and checks should be made payable to CYBA. The checks should be given to the appropriate coaches.

The league has some exciting ideas for the fall. They are planning a fall baseball program and tentative plans are being made for a flea market. As the summer season winds down more information will be made available concerning these programs.

We're not surprised that the big Boston banks are showing interest in the South Shore.

Recently, it seems, those big Boston banks have discovered something we've known since 1834.

South Shore people are wonderful people.

So the big Boston banks have been infesting the South Shore in a feeding frenzy. And after devouring local banks, they end up offering customers higher fees and impersonal service.

Dave McKee

by Joe & Dave

When it comes to athletics, there is no substitute for talent.

Sure, dedication and sportsmanship are nice but nothing tops God-given ability.

This was demonstrated Sunday as American golfer John Daly won the British Open at St. Andrews in Scotland by hitting towering drives and high-flying irons all over the world's oldest golf course in less strokes than anybody else.

Daly now owns two of golf's major titles, the '91 PGA and the '95 British Open, and is hotter than the new tar on Route 139.

However, Daly, who is the only golfer in his 20s with more than one major, is far from a clean-living, hard practicing professional athlete.

He is an alcoholic (he's been sober for more than a year and admits not remembering too much about his PGA victory four years ago.) Daly also went through a messy divorce that included allegations of wife-beating. He has also been a bit of a loose cannon during golf tournaments (he got into a fight with the father of a player in the parking lot after a tourney.)

In short, Daly is a wildly talented wild man who can hit the ball farther than anyone else in the world. And when he feels like playing, there's nothing any clean-living, right-thinking golfer can do to beat him.

But unless you experience John Daly in person, you aren't getting the full picture.

Last year Daly was at his worst at a charity golf tourney in Mashpee and I was fortunate to be among the many in attendance.

Let's start at the early clinic on that hot July day.

As pro golfer Greg Norman (a.k.a. "the Shark") chatted with hundreds of fans about the fundamentals of golf, he called Daly to the microphone.

Daly, who is 5'11, 185 pounds tops, told the crowd he hits his shots so far because he pretends the ball is his ex-wife's head.

Yikes.

Then Daly teed up a golf ball and roped a 220-yard drive with his putter. (Most weekend warriors cannot hit the ball that far with their driver.)

After a few more missiles with his putter, Daly pulled out his driver.

Using his well-known set-up and follow-through, he launched several drives that were out of sight and right down the middle of the fairway. The crowd oohed and aahed. The other golfers only shook their heads. ("If I could hit a ball that far, I'd win all the time" they must have been thinking.)

A little later one of the event organizers brought over a computerized measuring device and some of the players started hitting drives for distance. Norman hit one drive 290 yards, according to the machine. Some of the other players reached 280 yards.

Then Daly, who was smoking a Marlboro cigarette at that point, strolled over

Conditioning fuels Genovese's success

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

Never let it be said that 14-year-old gymnast Lauren Genovese doesn't make the most of her "spare" time.

Genovese, who'll be a freshman this September at Cohasset Junior/Senior High School, is one of those rare creatures who actually enjoys exercising. And not just long meandering bike rides and the rollerblading workouts she puts in "at least three times a week." Nope. Genovese gets just as much satisfaction pounding out a burning set of situps and crunches.

"I love working out," said Genovese. "I enjoy knowing that I'm burning calories."

One of Genovese's favorite workouts is doing sets of situps while watching television. Instead of grabbing a snack and settling in front of the tube to catch an episode of "Friends" or "Seinfeld," Genovese gets comfortable on the floor and does as many situps as she can during a commercial. When the show resumes, she'll catch a breather until the next set of station breaks.

Bizarre? Unorthodox? Maybe. But by the end of a half-hour show, Genovese has put in more than 100 situps without missing the antics of Kramer, George and the rest of the "Seinfeld" bunch.

Genovese, however, doesn't put in the work for its own sake. Her workouts are simply a means to an end. In the recent AAU Massachusetts championship meet at Methuen, Genovese finished fifth overall in the all-around competition in her 13-14 age group. Genovese was a model of consistency, placing in every event. She took a second in the floor routine, fourth on vault, fifth on beam and sixth with her bar routine.

Genovese was pleased with her performance, but admits she wasn't as prepared for the competition as she could have been. "I thought I could have done a little better, but I had only been in the gym twice before the meet," she said.

Head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni says Genovese is a "big asset to the team," and her strength, grace and enthusiasm makes her a big crowd-pleaser at meets.

"She makes time to condition and work out," Ardizzoni said. "To be able to do all that and school work is not easy, especially if you're in the eighth grade."

Genovese considers the floor routine her best event. She medaled in the event

Lenhart 'extra' miffed about running comments

letters

To the Editor:

I just finished reading Joe Reardon's comments concerning children running in the annual Hingham 4th of July Roadrace. I am highly insulted. I am 11 years old and this was my third year running. I have looked forward to the race every year, since I started at age 9. My parents certainly wouldn't have let me run the race if they did not feel that I was physically fit to do so. My time in the race was 32 minutes and 15 seconds. I would like to know what Mr. Reardon's time was, or did he even run the race? Both of my sisters, ages 10 and 13, agree with me whole heartedly. In fact, Colleen (10) was first in her division with a time of 36:43. She is very proud of her achievement. Next year I hope Mr. Reardon gives everyone some consideration. He could even congratulate us kids and give us a little respect for running the race instead of offending us. Thank you!

Patrick Lenhart
Del Prete Dr.
Hingham

Editor's Note: Patrick, you're missing my point altogether. First of all, congratulations on your time and the performance turned in by Colleen. My intention was not to insult you. No, I didn't run this year's race, but I've been running since 1978 and have seen firsthand young talented runners burn themselves out by racing before their bodies have matured. You obviously have a lot of talent. Why not concentrate on shorter road races. Remember, high school and college is the time to really make some noise with your running. Relax, hop into some mile-2 1/2 milers and don't make the same mistake I did. I ran a 36:06 10K when I was 14 and missed three months of training. Believe me, you'll be better off in, pardon the pun, the long run. Good luck!

Kristen Devine's pair of home runs led Cohasset's softball comeback.

Softball squad stages phenomenal comeback

"Life is queer, with its twists and turns,
As every one of us sometimes learns,
And many a failure turns about
When he might have won if he'd stuck it out;
Stick to your task, though the pace seems slow —
You may succeed with one more blow."

Anonymous

It wasn't one blow but 27 blows that brought Cohasset back from an 18-run deficit in what many spectators described as the greatest comeback ever played on a Cohasset Little League field.

The Cohasset girls' softball team chipped away at North Randolph's lead before exploding in the fifth inning for 15 runs on the way to a 33-25 victory. Kristen Devine provided the inspiration and kept Cohasset's hopes alive with home runs in the third and fourth innings. Kellie Straughn also homered. Maureen Equi and Sarah Motley both came close when each tripled in the fifth.

You don't overcome an 18-run deficit without a total team effort. Cohasset batters came to the plate focused and determined. The statistics were staggering. Maggie O'Neil had four and scored four runs. Beth Smoot had four walks and scored four runs, Maureen Equi had three hits and three runs; Kellie Straughn cracked four hits, one walk and scored five runs; Abby Murphy, four hits, one walk, five runs; and on it goes. Every Cohasset player scored in the game. In all, Cohasset pushed 33 runs across the plate.

You can't take the lead back without solid defense. Andi Shaughnessy has developed into one of the league's premier catchers on a team packed with talent at that position with Equi, O'Neil, Smoot and Courtney Anton always willing to take control of the backstop. Shaughnessy made two rock-solid tags at home that held North Randolph at bay. And when Anton spelled her for an inning because of the heat, she grabbed a fly ball to left field on the run. Megan Cox followed with a super catch at shortstop when she snared a blistering line drive destined for left field.

The play of the game, however, belonged to Leslie Thornton. Thornton's versatility allows her to play any outfield or infield position, including first and third base. With two outs and the bases loaded in the last inning of the longest game, Thornton dove forward to catch a ball inches from the ground to preserve the greatest comeback.

Cohasset plays at Whitman Thursday night before returning home for a rematch against Whitman Sunday night at the high school field.

Scituate, Cohasset players off to nationals

Local players Jesse Cole of Scituate and Cohasset's Greg Smith and Ben Maitland are part of the South Shore Baseball Club's 11-year-old AAU All Star team. They will represent Massachusetts in the 1995 Junior Olympic National Baseball Tournament in Kenner, La., from July 29 to Aug. 5.

The Bay State entry is one of 41 teams from around the country that will vie for the national championship during the nine-day tournament. There will be seven pools of five teams and one pool of six teams in the tournament. The top two teams from each pool will move on to the double-elimination medal round for the championship. The rest of the clubs will play in a consolation tournament.

The 13-member SSBC team is coached by Steve Almonte of Yarmouthport, a former pitching coach at Eckerd College in St. Petersburg, Fla., as well as the head coach at Nasson College in Springvale, Maine, and the Netherlands Baseball Club in Utrecht, Holland.

The players were selected following a series of instructional clinics at the South Shore Baseball Club's indoor facility in Hingham last spring. During the summer they played against other AAU teams throughout eastern New England, posting a record of 8-3-1 to earn the right to represent Massachusetts in the nationals.

"We have no superstars," says coach Almonte. "It seems that it was a different player every game who chipped in with a key hit or play to help us win. I expect our balance will be our strength in the upcoming tournament," he said.

Genovese's success. . .

at the all-league meet last winter and has a personal best mark of 8.15. Genovese says it's the dancing in her routine which makes the event so appealing to her.

"I like dancing and that's what it's all about," she said.

Genovese's dance background dates back to the tap and ballet lessons she took as a 6 year old. Ardizzoni also had a dance instructor work with the girls during past workouts.

"It (tap and ballet) got me into dancing and used to performing in front of a crowd," Genovese said.

"She can be really showy on the floor and that's what the judges are looking for," said Ardizzoni.

Genovese's gymnastics talents have transferred over nicely to the varsity cheerleading squad, of which she is a member. The tumbling, flips and splits she performs give the team an added dimension it may not otherwise have.

"She's a phenomenal cheerleader," Ardizzoni said. "She's a real asset to Cohasset cheerleading with the talent she brings to the team."

Genovese, along with gymnastics teammate Kristen Reynolds, won the Skippers' "Spirit Award" last season. The award, which is voted on by the team, goes to that girl who cheered on her teammates and exhibited the most enthusiasm during practices and meets.

"At a meet she is very enthusiastic and peppy," Ardizzoni said. "She's very energetic."

Along with her overall mix of style, strength and grace, Genovese is very level-headed with the way she approaches the sport. Her concentration is very important to her and she doesn't allow herself to waste energy brooding on a bad performance.

"I kind of just shake it off and move on to the next routine," Genovese explained. "I just say it's only a sport. I think how there are other girls to back me up. I remember what I did wrong and try to fix it. You can't change it right then so I just laugh about it."

Genovese admits she does get nervous just prior to her event, but has her own way of relaxing before it is time to perform.

"I'd say the most nervous part is waiting for the judge to give the previous girls' score. If you look over to your friends and get them to smile and look back at you, you can shake the nervousness off."

Genovese spent last spring playing JV softball, but is still undecided between that or going out for the track team. Although she has asthma and believes she would struggle in running events, Genovese is intrigued with the idea of taking a stab at the throwing events such as the javelin, discus and shot put.

For the rest of the summer, though, Genovese intends to continue what she is currently doing. Working out in both the gym and on her own.

And of course, there are the commercial-break situps in the evening. For Genovese, it beats a trip to the cookie jar.

Recreation Dept. news

Registration for the Music Circus presentation of "Goldilocks" will be held at the recreation office, Town Hall, from 9 a.m. to noon and from 5 to 7 p.m. on Thursday, July 27. Tickets are $5 per child and children must be enrolled in the playground program to participate.

The next Music Circus registration will be held for "Pocahontas" on Thursday, Aug. 3, same times, at Town Hall.

The Recreation Department is accepting telephone registrations for beginner and intermediate Dog Training classes to be taught by Laurie Cleveland. Classes will be held Tuesdays on Cohasset Common beginning Aug. 1.

Beginner classes will take place from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m., and intermediate to advanced classes will be held from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. The fee for the eight-week program is $46 and is payable on the first day of class.

Participating dogs should be a minimum of three months of age. Basic obedience and responsible pet ownership will be taught in the beginner class, and the intermediate to advanced class is designed for dogs who have completed the beginner class.

Owners are required to have their dogs equipped with a humane choke chain. No spike collars will be allowed.

For further information call the Rec. Dept. at 383-6791. Non-residents will be accepted on a space available basis.

The Recreation Department is accepting registrations for South Shore Soccer Camp for boys and girls ages eight to 18 during the weeks of July 31 to Aug. 4 and Aug. 7 to 11. However, the week of Aug. 7-11 is filled except for participants who register for both weeks of soccer camp. The camp runs from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. and costs $165 per week, with discounts for multiple weeks and subsequent children available. The camp represents top-flight training. For further information call 383-6791.

The Recreation Department will sponsor a band concert on Cohasset Common Tuesday, Aug. 1, at 7:30 p.m., featuring the 30-piece South Shore Concert Band under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh.

Concerts are free and open to the public and are made possible by grants from the South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc. and the American Federation of Musicians.

Another concert will be held Tuesday, Aug. 15, same time and place.

Listeners are encouraged to bring lawn chairs or blankets and insect repellant.

South Shore Soccer Camp - 1995

Registrations for South Shore Soccer Camp have begun for boys and girls ages 8-18. This is South Shore Soccer Camp's fifth year of operation in Cohasset. If you are interested in registering, it is suggested that you call the Cohasset Recreation Department, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall, or call 383-6791, in the near future, to be assured enrollment.

South Shore Soccer Camp will be offered to both girls and boys, Monday through Friday, during the weeks of July 31-August 4 and August 7-11. Should a camper wish to attend both camp weeks, this will now be possible. In order to choose the week of camp you desire, early registration is advised as both camp weeks must be restricted in number.

Camp meets daily, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. The cost for camp is $165 per week and discounts for multiple weeks and subsequent children are available. South Shore Soccer Camp represents top-flight training, delivered by top college and high school coaches and players from the New England area.

Registrations are running ahead of last year and if you are interested in registering for South Shore Soccer Camp, you should do so right away to be certain of enrollment.

extra points

to the machine.

He teed up a ball and with the cigarette still dangling from his lips, hit a drive 315 yards.

Hit another shot 310 and another 317. It was quite a display. He stepped back and flicked the ash on his cigarette.

More fun awaited Daly on the course during the tourney.

He barely talked to his playing partners who had each shelled out several thousand dollars to the charity to play with him.

Several times while his group was putting, Daly played catch with his caddy. So much for sportsmanship as Daly sailed his ball over the heads of his partners chuckling all the way.

At a short par three hole, Daly pulled out his driver and hit a 300 yard smash that cleared the trees and everything else. Nobody knows where the ball ended up or if it hit anyone.

Then at other holes, Daly teed off from a water bottle or simply didn't play as he sat in his golf cart signing autographs. (One good thing about Daly-he treats the fans well. He'll sign anything and posed for numerous photos without a hassle.)

In the hush-hush country club world of golf, Daly is like a bad Elvis impersonator at Carnegie Hall.

As for being a sports role model, Daly is not the one to emulate. But his talent is one in a million and cannot be ignored.

And that is the reality in sports. Talent is the ultimate advantage. You can be the biggest jerk in the world and rack up a criminal record that would make Al Capone jealous but if you can hit a golf ball 315 yards, knock out all opponents inside a boxing ring or hit a baseball 420 feet, you will be honored.

This trend isn't limited to professional sports. High schools and colleges sometimes give talented athletes special treatment. And the reason is simple. Every once in a while something magical will happen. Something like Daly winning the British Open in front of the whole world.

Cohasset Mariner

Vol. XVII, No. 40 | Thursday, August 3, 1995 | 1-800-649-6661 | 75 cents

Town Cemetery still possible off Rte. 3A

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

At its meeting Tuesday night, members of the cemetery study committee ploughed ahead on two fronts: they will proceed with an engineering study on the expansion of Beechwood Cemetery and will talk to abutters about buying land to build a road to reach the Red Fox Lane site, off Rte. 3A.

July bows out at 90°

By Charlene Vandini
Mariner staff

It's hot, it's humid, but so far, there hasn't been the distinction of an official heat wave.

Mariner weather man Bob Skilling, who reports for the National Weather Service from his station in Hingham, said many coastal towns such as Cohasset, have only flirted with readings of three consecutive days of 90-degree weather, which is the standard for a heat wave.

The high levels of humidity, dew-

Area health board lights way with tobacco regulations

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner staff

The tobacco industry is under fire at the federal level.

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) concluded recently that nicotine is a drug that should be regulated and is pushing for tobacco product restrictions and regulation.

Republicans in Congress are being warned to cut ties with tobacco lobbies. Last week, Rep. Henry Waxman a California Democrat on the health subcommittee of the House Commerce Committee, discovered documents that show that during the 1970s the Philip Morris company tracked and targeted hyperactive children as future smokers and conducted studies in which college students were given electric shocks to determine if the students smoked more under stress.

"These documents make it crystal clear that we need regulation of tobacco to protect our children from becoming addicted to a life-threatening drug," Waxman said.

'We're working for 100 percent compliance (on retailers not selling cigarettes to minors).'

of the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative.

Here on the South Shore, the Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program located in Hanover, has been hard at work for more than a year trying with education and enforcement of state regulations on tobacco sales to help achieve the Commonwealth's goal of reducing tobacco use 50 percent by 1999.

Many of the restrictions on tobacco sales just now being proposed at the federal level are already in effect

Cohasset's week

Recycling made simple

Through a donation made by North Shore Recycled Fibers/The Newark Group, residents of Cohasset have recycling information at their fingertips 24 hours a day by dialing a recycling hotline (1-800-800-6881 or (617) RECYCLE.

A grant from NSRF, one of the state's leading recycling companies and a key provider of recycling services to the town, ensures that Cohasset's recycling message will remain part of a non-profit, statewide recycling hotline dubbed "E-Call." When Cohasset's zipcode is entered following a call to the hotline, a voicemail message will be played, detailing Cohasset's latest recycling news.

Parking stickers available

The Cohasset Recreation Department still has parking stickers available for residents. The stickers, which are valid for Sandy Beach, Government Island and Parker Avenue boat ramp, will be on sale through the summer.

Stickers are issued only on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to noon.

Dogs must be licensed

The deadline for licensing dogs in Cohasset was May 1. A $25 fine is due after that date. Town Clerk office hours are Monday through Wednesday, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Thursday, 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. and Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

If unable to go to the Town Clerk's office, a check for $8 (neutered and spayed animals) or $15 (male and female animals) may be mailed to: Town Clerk, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset 02025 along with a note listing type of animal, owner's name, address and telephone number, breed, color, dog's name and a copy of the dog's rabies certificate.

July bows out at 90°, August arrives at 95°

point readings of 75 degrees or more, have made for high levels of discomfort, and have kept air conditioners humming around the clock.

Records from Skilling's station show the month of July average three degrees warmer than normal, and there were 26 days of above 80-degree temperatures. The high for the month was 98 degrees recorded on July 14.

Monday (July 31) reached a high of 90 degrees.The dewpoint soared to 75 degrees on July 25, 26, and 29. The dewpoint is the temperature at which, if the air were cooled down, dew would form.

Dr. William Calhoun, a cardiologist affiliated with South Shore Hospital in Weymouth, said the prolonged heat is felt most acutely by elderly residents, and people with respiratory and heart problems.

Older people have a decreased ability to regulate their body heat, and a greater likelihood of other health problems which the heat can exacerbate.

But Calhoun recommends that even people in good physical health should use extra care when exerting themselves. Regular runners should avoid exercising between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m., the warmest time of the day, and should stop if they experience any difficulty breathing.

Most cardiac patients he sees in his practice complain the most of respiratory problems, and may also experience swelling in the joints, particularly the ankles. Medication to treat heart problems is responsible for that: as the body tries to dissipate heat, veins dilate, he said.

High humidity, at dewpoint levels above 70 degrees, will bring out more complaints, Calhoun said, but it is the heat that causes more problems for heart patients, especially the elderly.

Perspiration is important, as the body's natural ability to cool itself through evaporation. If the body becomes dehydrated, it loses its ability to perspire. This can result in heat stroke, he said. Signs of heat stroke are weakness, fatigue, dizziness, headache, muscle cramps, nausea, with elevated body temperatures.

Calhoun said this is why people are urged to drink plenty of water when temperatures rise. This advice, he added, applies to everyone, young and old alike.

The Cohasset swim center has proved to be a popular place to beat the heat. Co-director Scott Theriault said that in the last week, more than 2,000 have cooled off at the pool.

The Council on Aging is aware of the difficulties elderly residents may have during the hot weather.

Director Kathy Bryanton said the Cohasset council has organized a telephone check-in program, through which senior citizens and council staff are alerted if an individual has a problem.

"Most people are very aware of how to keep themselves safe in the heat," Bryanton said.

She added that people are heeding the advice in the council's newsletter, to drink plenty of water, avoid strenuous activity, and take frequent cool baths.

In addition, more local senior citizens are taking advantage of the air conditioned "senior shuttle," Bryanton said. The van drivers help carry bundles from the supermarket, and have delivered prescriptions from pharmacies.

Attendance at the senior citizens luncheons has also increased, she noted, and more people spend the afternoon at the center where the council is providing movies and refreshments.

"Some people are staying until 3 o'clock," she said.

	High Temp.	Low Temp.	Rainfall
July 26	87 degrees	74 degrees	0
July 27	93	74	0
July 28	84	70	0.07 inch
July 29	90	71	0.50
July 30	89	68	0
July 31	90	58	0
August 1	95	66	0

Cumulative/comparative statistics:

Precipitation total for July	2.21 inches
Normal July precipitation	3.34 inches
"wettest" July	10.38 inches (1988)
"driest" July	0.53 inch (1968)
Total precipitation year to date	17.72 inches (thru 8/1)
Departure from normal to date	- 9.27 inches (thru 8/1)
High temperature for July	98 degrees on July 14
Low temperature for July	55 degrees on July 3 & 4

July temperatures averaged three degrees above normal, with a mean temperature of 74.5 degrees. The July normal is 71.5 degrees.

A look back at July, 1995

The temperatures reached the 90-degree mark on five days, which is normal for July, but the maximum temperatures reached the 80s on 21 days, leaving only five days with high readings in the 70s. This combined with a stretch of very warm nights with lows not falling below 70 degrees for seven consecutive days resulted in a mean temperature of 73.5 degree—three degrees above normal. Only two other Julys have been warmer: July, 1994 (last year!) with 76.1 and July 1955, with 74.7 degrees.

Thunderstorms occurred on five days, the average number for the month, and finally brought some worthwhile rainfall toward month's end, including almost an inch on the 25th and a half-inch on the 29th. The first three weeks were extremely dry, and the final monthly precipitation total of 2.21 inches was still one inch short of normal.

It's probably the high levels of humidity that made the past month the most noteworthy. Humidity levels soared into the oppressive range on several days, with dewpoints reaching 75 degrees on the 25th, 26th, and 29th. The highest dewpoint recorded was 76 degrees. This is close to the highest on record, which is about 78 degrees, recorded on rare occasions.

A recent request for proposals (RFP) to determine exactly what type of expansion is feasible at Beechwood yielded only one response and will therefore be reissued.

Committee member James Gilman will compile a list of firms which might be interested and ask Gregory Doyon, executive secretary, to mail the RFP again on Monday.

Without expansion, there is enough space at the Beechwood Cemetery to last for another ten years. There at currently an average of 35 funerals per year in Cohasset, but not all burials are at Beechwood.

However, if the cemetery is expanded by several acres, it could last even longer.

The committee wants the engineering firm to suggest how that expansion could yield the greatest space.

"We are interested in them giving the committee recommendations," said chairman Joseph Jerz.

Although the exact nature of the expansion remains uncertain, the plan itself is not in doubt.

"It's a real project," said Gilman. "It's going to happen. We have the money allocated."

Last fall's special town meeting approved some $70,000 to study the Beechwood expansion.

Gilman went on to explain that there are really no suitable, available pieces of land left in town. Last year the group analyzed zoning maps and found that virtually all of the remaining large tracts of land are wetlands, conservation or park land, or restricted by deed to specific owners or purposes.

"The beauty of Beechwood is that it's already a cemetery and we can get at it," Gilman stated.

The so-called Red Fox Lane site consists of eight acres of town-owned land off Rte. 3A south of Stop & Shop.

Glenn Pratt and several others resigned from the cemetery committee a year ago in protest over what they charged was selectman's refusal to proceed with engineering studies of the location.

However, Pratt has again applied to return to the committee, most recently to replace Nancy Snowdale, who resigned. Selectmen have not yet taken action on the request.

Pratt favors Red Fox Lane because it could provide some 5,000 grave sites, enough to last the town for a century.

Voters at both the special town meeting last fall and the annual town meeting this spring rejected an article sponsored by Pratt calling for money to proceed with an engineering study of the site.

Selectmen and other officials wanted to wait until after the Beechwood study is completed.

Committee members said this week that access remains the problem with the Red Fox Lane site because the area near Rte. 3A is wetlands.

Members of the conservation commission have informally told the cemetery committee that they do not favor filling wetlands to build a road.

To avoid destroying wetlands, land would have to be obtained from an abutter on either the Red Fox Lane or Sohier St. sides of the property, or Red Fox Lane itself would have to be used.

This private way with three houses on it would have to be improved to meet planning board standards to become an accepted public street.

Pratt suggested that the street could be beautified with an island in the center, as part of the cemetery project, if it did become a public way. He also said that it is preferable to use an existing road than to create yet another exit onto Rte. 3A, which is the planning board is not enthusiastic about.

There was also informal discussion about reaching the property from the Deer Hill School or buying from a private land owner on Sohier St.

In addition, to the conservation commission, the Red Fox Lane site would have to be approved by the board of health.

It could be several years before a cemetery is built there, committee members said.

In addition to Jerz, Gilman and Pratt, member Joseph Curley attended the meeting. The fifth member, Julianna Hassan, was absent.

The committee will meet again August 15 at 6 p.m. at the Deer Hill school and plans to walk through the area off Red Fox Lane.

Health board lights way with regulations in many South Shore towns, said the Collaborative's director Dawn Sibor.

Massachusetts statewide anti-smoking/tobacco use program has been in full swing since January of 1994. The slogan, "It's time we made smoking history," is becoming a familiar credo to many. Financed by a 25 cent excise tax on tobacco products the Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control has an annual budget of $300,000 and serves 14 South Shore Communities.

The collaborative has helped many towns institute smoke-free policies for work places and municipal buildings and has offered cessation programs for town employees and their spouses.

Frequent compliance checks, in which teens under 18 are sent into various stores to buy cigarettes, and merchant education programs have helped keep local retailers on their toes and up to date on laws regarding everything from cigarette displays and signs to the sale of cigarettes to minors.

The push for permitting comes on the heels of poor results in Hingham and Cohasset during recent Tobacco Control Program stings. In Hingham, seven merchants were found in violation of selling tobacco products to a minor and 10 out of 18 attempts made by a minor to buy cigarettes were successful. A 55 percent compliance rate shows that permitting will be the next step, said Hingham Health Agent, Bruce Capman.

"It will give the board another tool to enforce the regulations," he said.

Cohasset had a 59 percent compliance with 10 of 17 attempted purchases successful. Last June the health board voted for tobacco permitting which will go into effect Sept. 1, along with bans on vending machines, and free standing tobacco product displays.

Cohasset Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said the permitting regulations will help the town.

"It gives you a little bit of power to deal with the sellers if they're not in compliance. Before, there was not a whole lot you could do. This gives us flexibility in dealing with the problem and we hope to use the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative's special health agents to enforce the policies," Godzik said.

Still, Sibor said permitting isn't punishment, compliance is what the Tobacco control program is looking for. Merchant education programs will continue to be held every three months in various South Shore locations, and at various times for the retailers' convenience, and the Collaborative's health educator for each community will meet with every tobacco retailer, face to face by the fall, Sibor said.

"We're working for 100 percent compliance," said Sibor, who noted with merchant education and vending machines, "it's very possible."

Most recently in Hingham, bans on vending machines went into effect July 1, and Sibor met again with the board of health on the issue of tobacco retailer licensing. Such permits would give the town more local control make officials aware of who is selling tobacco products in Hingham and will enable local boards of health to crack down on violators state and local laws by selling tobacco products to minors.

Businesses who fail to comply with the law more than three times after receiving a permit, could have that permit revoked preventing the sale of tobacco products and seriously cutting into store sales.

And according to Sibor, cigarette sales can add up to nearly 40 percent of convenience store business.

Sibor supports FDA commissioner Dr. David Kessler but said she is not sure that nicotine will ever be regulated.

"This is a good beginning and a good way to start moving," said Sibor, who maintained that all of the regulations and restrictions being proposed are steps toward a goal of regulation.

The 'other' Tedeschis make Cohasset their home

By James Loewenstein
Mariner correspondent

Because their last name is Tedeschi, everyone asks them if they're part of the family that owns the chain of Tedeschi food stores.

No, retired pathologist Luke Tedeschi and his sons Mark, an editor, and Paul, an advertising agency executive, do not control a chain of mini-marts on the side. They're not even related to the owners.

But they do live in Cohasset, which means they have something else in common with the mini-mart owning family, who also come from the South Shore.

"We're the other Tedeschis of the South Shore," says Dr. Tedeschi of South Main Street.

Sharing the name has its advantages and disadvantages, family members say.

Mark Tedeschi, 32, an editor at Footwear News in Braintree, says that he uses his wife's maiden name when he calls the plumber, because he doesn't want to be overcharged.

On the other hand, said Paul's wife, Jill, once they faced a 1-1/2 hour wait in a restaurant, but after the host asked for their name, they were led to a table right away.

Mark's wife, Laurie, said that she had assumed that her future husband was part of the mini-mart family.

"I never asked him," she recalled, adding that she didn't bring it up because the family connection "didn't seem relevant."

She said she jumped to that conclusion because Mark was from Massachusetts, Tedeschi is an uncommon name, and when she was growing up in Hingham, everyone she had heard about named Tedeschi was associated with the food store chain.

Mark Tedeschi said he has received E-mail messages from a childhood friend of one of the famous Tedeschis, who believed that Mark had grown up with him on the South Shore.

There is another big coincidence associated with Dr. Tedeschi and his sons.

None had any connection to Cohasset, but, one after another, they have left various locations in the Boston area and purchased houses here over the past two years. They say they were drawn here by a love for the area and the warmth of the people.

"It is very unusual for three people from the same family to move into a small community," Dr. Tedeschi said.

Dr. Tedeschi, who moved here after Mark and Paul, says it was "fate" that led him to find his home in Cohasset.

He said he was not really intending to move from Framingham, but his wife, Elaine, had fallen in love with a house on South Main Street in Cohasset when they had come to visit Paul. Every time they visited Paul, they visited the South Main Street house, too, never thinking it would be up for sale, Elaine Tedeschi said.

When Dr. Tedeschi and his wife went to see the Cohasset house that Mark was about to move into, they met Mark's realtor, and told her about the house Elaine Tedeschi had fallen in love with. The realtor then said that that very same house had gone on sale that week and that it was listed with her agency.

There wasn't even a "For Sale" sign on the home yet, Elaine Tedeschi recalled.

Dr. Tedeschi and his wife moved into that house in June.

Last year, Dr. Tedeschi retired as chief pathologist at MetroWest Medical Center in Framingham, where he had raised his family.

The number of Tedeschi residents in Cohasset is expected to grow even further. Laurie and Jill Tedeschi are both pregnant, and both are expected to deliver next winter, within weeks of each other.

The Cohasset High School Class of 1985 is going to hold its 10th reunion Saturday, Sept. 2, at Kimball's by the Sea. Several people from the class haven't been located yet, they are asking for your help in finding them. If anyone knows the whereabouts of the following, call Ingrid (Anderson) Drago at 934-6109.

The people are: Staci Stobart, Vicki Spooner, Katie Bishop, Molly Gallagher, Pip Gilmour, Karlin Isele, Jim Martin, Lisa Peachell, Cheryl Turner and Lauren Walsh.

Any leads you can give them would be greatly appreciated!

What a sad week last week was, it is hard to even write about. Everyone knew Ed Atkinson in so many ways. As the minister of the First Parish Church in Cohasset, as a loving husband to Sally and father to Lizzie, Julie and Sarah, as a friend and helpmate to so many, and as a community volunteer and leader. His untimely loss affects so many, the list could go on forever. Our prayers are with you all.

We also extend deep sympathy to the Noonan Family, Brian, Bob, Ann and Brenda — their mom, Dorothy Noonan Russell, passed away last week after "fighting the good fight" for several weeks. This writer remembers her as such a good mother, a fine and caring lady full of charm, grace, love and laughter. She certainly will be missed!

Belated anniversary greetings go to Mary and John Campbell, who celebrated their 57th wedding anniversary Aug. 1. Here's to many more for a wonderful pair!

Welcome aboard! John H. Winters III is our new harbormaster, and everyone knows he will do a grand job! He surely has the experience! And, with Tom Wigmore and Bob Baggs as his able assistants, we know our harbor is the best!

Just to let you know, beach stickers are still available. What a beautiful place to be (especially in this weather), we are so fortunate. Take advantage!

Please everybody, take the time to say a prayer for Joan Powers, who is recovering after suffering a stroke last week. A fine lady like that won't be down for long, we know that much! Especially with the love that surrounds her.

It sure seems strange not to see Sgt. Richard Abbadessa "walking the beat", seems as though he has always been a police officer in our town! We wish him the best in his retirement, he's one fine man.

There is another reunion to tell you about, the CHS Class of 1945! It is going to be held Aug. 18 at the Chart House. Jim Sullivan, Betty (Emery) O'Neil and Jay Jay (Jayson) Healy are members of the reunion committee, and they invite any member of the high school entrance class of 1941 to attend and join in the celebration (it has keen 50 years since they left the old Osgood School).

Call Jay Jay Healy for more info or tickets at 383-0018.

Congratulations go to Lauren deVito who received the prestigious Northeastern University Alumnae Book Award for 1995. The award is given to outstanding juniors, and Lauren certainly is one!

We wish Judy Basmajian a speedy recovery after her recent knee surgery. Here's hoping that swimming is a big part of the rehabilitation, one way to beat the heat!

Hundreds pay tribute to the Rev. Atkinson

Service to be broadcast August 3

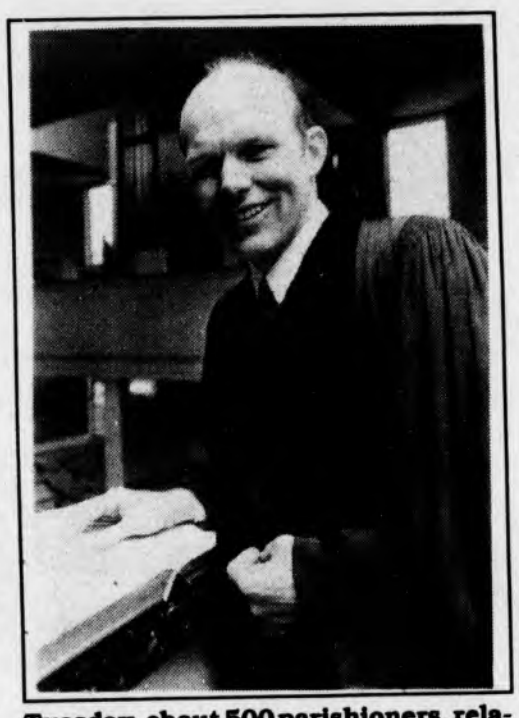
By James Loewenstein
Mariner correspondent

Some 500 parishioners, relatives and others attended a memorial service Tuesday for the Rev. Edward T. Atkinson, who had been the minister of the First Parish in Cohasset since 1969.

The Rev. Atkinson died July 24 of a heart attack. He was 60 years old.

The service was held Tuesday afternoon in the Meeting House on the Common where he had been minister, and the building was filled to capacity. An overflow crowd watched the service on closed circuit television in the Town Hall's auditorium, which was filled, too. Many cried during the service.

Although Atkinson graduated from M.I.T. with a degree in architecture, and could have been successful in that field, he preferred to become a minister so he could address more pressing needs in society, said his brother, William Atkinson of Darien, Conn.



Tuesday, about 500 parishioners, relatives and friends attended a memorial service for the Rev. Edward T. Atkinson, shown here. (file photo)

Atkinson spent much of his life working to stop nationalism, militarism, and "the politics of the nuclear arms race," said the Rev. Robert A. Thayer, minister of the Unitarian Society of Fairhaven.

During the Cold War, Atkinson worked "under the gun" to change people's thinking in an effort to avert a nuclear catastrophe, said Thayer, who conducted the service.

Atkinson's death "has left a huge emptiness in our midst," he said. "I loved him as deeply as I've ever loved another human being."

RAtkinson was "very true to himself, to his beliefs" and to his friends and family, said his daughter, Elizabeth Murphy of Hingham.

She recalled that her father had objected to the lyrics of a song she was singing in her fifth-grade chorus, after which she was suddenly no longer a member of the group.

It was only much later that she realized that her father cared so much about her that he took an interest in what she was singing, and that he had objected to the lyrics because of their message of "suicide being simple," she said.

Atkinson was also a "natural-born musician," who was largely self-taught, said William Atkinson. He played the accordion and piano and taught himself to "play the piano lying on the piano bench with his hands crossed," he said.

Robert Belliveau of Continental Cablevision, which arranged the closed circuit broadcast, said Atkinson was "as tall as the steeple on his church" in educating the community about the historical and spiritual significance of the First Parish Meeting House, which was built in 1747.

Continental Cablevision will broadcast the service today (Thursday, Aug. 3), at 6 p.m. on Channel 3.

Summer

'There is a sumptuous variety about the New England weather that compels the stranger's admiration — and regret. The weather is always doing something there; always attending strictly to business; always getting up new designs and trying them on the people to see how they will go . . . Yes, one of the brightest gems in the New England Weather is the dazzling uncertainty of it.'
— Mark Twain

Totally out of character, our weather has become all too predictable lately.

It's hot and humid and it's been hot and humid for what seems like an eternity.

Right now it's hard to imagine ice, sleet, snow, mittens, scarfs — all that winter stuff that New England is famous for.

But we've noticed one of the positive side effects to the current heat wave is that people seem friendlier and less hurried.

Is this the secret that our neighbors who reside south of the Mason-Dixon Line possess? A slower way of life to go along with a smooth Southern drawl?

While we haven't heard any y'alls from locals — we've found in recent weeks that more and more people are pausing longer inside the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham. Those who scale the steps in the old Hingham Journal building in Hingham Square and open our office door are in no rush to leave.

It's the air conditioning, you say.

We'll admit that our window unit does make a difference but we've noticed increased friendliness on the hot streets of Hingham and Cohasset as well. More drivers are allowing others to make left turns and shoppers and shop-keepers all seem chattier than usual. Detail officers are waving and construction crews are nodding hello.

We've all had enough — but the grumpies seem to have given way to the grin-and-bear-it mentality. Local citizens haven't lost their sense of humor.

One entry in the Hingham police log at the start of a 4 p.m. shift last week summed it up for all of us — "Hooot and Huuumid," it said.

July bid adieu with a high of 90 and August greeted us at 95 degrees. The summer of 1995 may yet go down in the record books. July had 26 days above the 80-degree mark and August has just begun. Yet with cooler temperatures are just around the corner, we'll all be back to our fall schedules soon.

So enjoy summer while it lasts.

And when you feel your irritation level begin to rise with the dewpoint — remember what else Mark Twain said:

'Everybody talks about the weather, but nobody does anything about it.'

Family extends heartfelt thank you

letters

To the Editor:

Brendan Goff and his family would like to thank the Cohasset Police Dept., Cohasset Fire Dept., South Shore Hospital Paramedics, Osgood School Recreational Counselors and most of all the two Nynex employees, Bob Goggin and Joe King for their response to Brendan's accident July 10 at the intersection of Shoier St. and Ripley Rd.

We would also like to thank anyone else who helped, and for all the thoughtful phone calls and cards. Brendan is going in the hospital Friday, Aug. 4, for surgery on his knee but we hope to have him up and around in a few weeks.

Help with Harborfest is appreciated

To the Editor:

Thanks from the Harborfest Committee!

We have so many people to thank that this will be a lengthy letter.

Thanks to Mary Sease for her work in coordinating the Friday afternoon program featuring the Ice Cream Festival on the Honor Roll Courtyard. Carmen from Strawberry Parfait and Lily from J.J.'s led the way by assisting Mary with supplies and advice. Mary, Kathy O'Neil and Kaitlyn O'Neil presided over the scooops with tubs of ice cream from Strawberry Parfait, J.J.'s, Bergson's, Wilbur North and Brigham's. The Cohasset Food Pantry benefited as the recipient of many items of canned goods as well as $97 in cash.

Jack Worley and his staff assisted with some games for the youngsters, and the Teen Center, led by Peter Collins, introduced the Greenhouse Radar Center.

This year's Pancake Breakfast was held at Bancroft Hall thanks to the Cohasset Lightkeepers. As always, the Rotary Club of Cohasset did the honors as the host of the breakfast. The Rotary very generously contributed $250 to buy supplies for the breakfast and the Chowder Festival. The Rotary's representative is the tireless Don Harrold, Mr. Perpetual Motion.

Center Stage Activities are under the guidance of the Rev. Gary Ritts who is also in charge of the weather; great job on both counts. Our thanks to all of the performers. One of the reasons that the vendors love to come to Cohasset is the entertainment which is provided.

Thanks to John McNulty from Hingham Lumber for donating the material for the stage and to Ralph Froio and the crew from Froio Landscaping for building the stage under the direction of Jim Lagrotteria and Al Buckley.

Our thanks to Lyn Previte for all the work which she put into the planning for the clambake. Unfortunately we were not able to proceed with this event.

First Parish held its Gospel Concert Saturday evening. This is a great show and becomes more popular each year. It is a big boost for our button sales.

Sunday is our busiest day and starts with the Blessing of the Fleet. I'm sure that all those who participated join us in thanking the Cohasset Council on Churches. Each year someone drops a contribution in the "outgo" basket. Thanks!

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce sponsors our Norman Rockwell Parade and started us off with a very generous donation of $2,000 which covered most of the parade costs. Keith Knowles is the guiding force behind the parade and does everything except lead the bands.

Thanks to all of the units who marched and to all those who entered floats. Congratulations to the winners of the float awards. The Geo. H. Mealy American Legion Post and VFW Post # 9146 donated the cash awards to the Cohasset Historical Military Memorial on behalf of the winners.

How about the Rev. Ed Atkinson's band? What a great addition marching and playing all at the same time.

Our closing event is the Chowderfest. Our thanks for their generosity go to Star's Restaurant, the 1995 winner, and to the Chart House, Kimball's, The Red Lion Inn, Jake's Seafood Restaurant and the Borrowed Butler. We greatly appreciate the donations of your chowder and your employee's participation in this event. VFW Post #9146 sponsored the Chowderfest and we are grateful for the help of Ira Stoughton, Bill Higgins and George Haley. Again, that was Don Harrold directing traffic.

Our button sales helped to provide funds for the Harborfest Events and we are indebted to the donors of prizes for the Harborfest Raffle. The Rockland Trust, The Pilgrim Cooperative Bank, Barry Waste Services, Inc., Mike O'Connell of the Boston Bruins, The Chart House Restaurant, South Shore Chevrolet Geo and the Cohasset Historic Commission donated the various prizes. Hallmark 100, Wayne Robbins, The Goodale Company and Iri Bloomfield were instrumental in selling the buttons.

Our thanks go to the South Shore Playhouse for its donation of $1,000 for the Center Stage performers,

Pirates storm Scituate for Heritage Days

By Rob Rogers
Mariner staff

South Shore residents who have secretly dreamed of a life beneath the Jolly Roger need look no further than Scituate Harbor's Heritage Days festival for their opportunity to turn pirate.

Sleuth and Company is bringing its "Harboring New England's Mysteries" show — a two-hour sail aboard the schooner "Liberty" hosted by a joking, singing pirate crew — to Scituate on Saturday, Aug. 5.

Visitors who climb aboard for a taste of "the sweet trade" will have the opportunity to help sail a pirate vessel, vie with buccaneers for buried treasure and experience the living history of New England as told by Sleuth and Company's talented actors.

"At one time there were pirates all up and down the Atlantic coast, from Maine to Key West — including, rumor has it, the port of Green Harbor," said Sleuth and Company producer Carol Schreck. "A lot of the islands in Boston Harbor were rumored to be the resting place of Kidd's treasure, and the state actually had to prohibit digging on some of the islands because so many people were going out looking for treasure."

Piracy was as much a part of New England life as clambakes and nor'easters from about 1690 to 1720, when Britain's Navigation Acts forbade her colonies to import or export goods from any nation other than the mother country.

The cost of imported British goods, and the relative rarity of foreign silks, spices, liquors, and slaves — as well as the harsh discipline aboard merchant vessels of the time — prompted many an honest New England seaman to turn in his Union Jack for the skull and crossbones, and take up life "on his own account" as a pirate.

"Some of the research I have done suggests that many people became pirates without even realizing it," Schreck said. "They would go to sea as a privateer — someone legally commissioned to loot enemy ships — and end up boarding an enemy vessel accidentally, forcing them to become outlaws."

During the "golden age of piracy," seafaring outlaws realized handsome profits by smuggling their ill-gotten booty to pirate brokers such as Thomas Hancock, whose son would grow up to sign the Declaration of Independence.

In fact, as the "Liberty's" pirate actors point out, a number of former pirates and privateers became patriots during the Revolutionary War, harassing British shipping and hijacking vital supplies or arms and ammunition for the rebellion.

The ship's players don't limit their performances to tales of pirate plunder, however. Sleuth and Company's actors also hold their audience spellbound with the true story of a storm-damaged Boston ship which drifted, helpless, across the Atlantic Ocean to Africa, as well as the tale of a ghostly black specter haunting Boston's Castle Island.

While the "Liberty's" voyage is educational, its main purpose is entertainment. The ship's actors and actresses encourage audience participation in their merry performances — and require passengers to greet each passing ship with a throaty piratical "arrrrgh."

Shreck and "Liberty" captain Greg Muzzy pilot their vessel around Boston Harbor every summer evening, leaving and arriving from the city's Long Wharf. Saturday's voyage to Scituate will mark the first time the traveling sea-show has performed in a port outside of Boston.

"This is our first official season," said Shreck, who also produces Boston's 'Twilight Mystery Tour.' "Our show has attracted both local residents and visitors because it's fascinating history, fun entertainment, and a nice sail. Because our stage isn't set and conditions are constantly changing, the show is always unpredictable, which can make things difficult for our actors. But they always make it work."

The 80-foot "Liberty" will depart from Scituate's Cole Parkway, near the Harbormaster's office, for two shows at 1 and 4:30 p.m. on Aug. 5. Admission is $35 for adults and $25 for children 12 and under. Group rates are available for parties of 15 or more.

The ship will also offer two one-and-a-half-hour sails at 10:30 a.m. and 7 p.m. Reservations are available by calling (617) 542-2525 between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m.

David Sinaiko, Michael Ethridge, Christopher Morrison and Dori May Kelly play the roles of pirates aboard the schooner, Liberty, which will be in Scituate, Saturday, Aug. 5, for Scituate Heritage Days Festival '95.

Mass transit on railbed opposed

letters

To the Editor:

Never have I observed such a long enduring stream of correspondence as the Greenbush restoration proposal has instigated. It has literally been years and there is hardly an edition of a regional newspaper without some comment.

Since the 1970s I have been opposed to any plan for restoration of mass transportation over the Greenbush railroad bed. In the 1970s I proposed a plan for a regional bikeway/walkway on the Greenbush RR bed, that would connect coastal parks, villages, historic sites, etc. In Hingham and Cohasset alone, there is the opportunity to connect the 19th century Brewer Estate, Bare Cove Park, South Shore Country Club, the nationally significant Lincoln Historic District, World's End, Wompatuck State Park, Foundry Pond, Nantasket Beach, Whiting Woods, Cohasset Village and Common, etc. A visionary bike/walkway plan utilizing naturalistic landscaping to accentuate the woodlands/wetlands along the way with a guiding brochure/map would lead people on into innumerable recreational and educational activities.

I remain firmly opposed to any mass transportation use of the Greenbush corridor. The only reason the railbed is considered at all is because it is physically there. No person, no official in their right mind would consider building a railway from scratch through the congested Hingham route if it did not physically exist. It is a horrendous corridor; a ridiculous, intrusive, environmentally destructive corridor. The revival of which would negatively impact or even destroy the very attributes that make the Hingham residential environment extraordinary.

All persons who visualize the horrendous impact must rise up and join together with whatever force is legally and honorably necessary to sink the political ship(s) that so blindly support the environmentally destructive Greenbush restoration proposal.

I note that in the June 26 newspaper Mr. William Grimes of Hingham, Chairman of Back on the Track, has voiced his displeasure of the busway idea along the Greenbush railbed. No matter how sensitive Mr. Grimes sounds at times he remains a train enthusiast — meaning that he loves trains. He wants trains for his interior, deep-seated love of trains. I believe that Mr. Grimes' love of trains blinds his outlook, causing his opinion to be sensible sometimes, but not free of prejudice. Again I relate that Hingham's unique nationally significant historic district, which stretches in reality from Green Street by the sea to Fort Hill to French Street, encompasses an architecturally distinctive panorama of history that has developed primarily on a series of original land grant settlers home lots laid out on or before 1635. This historic architectural district is a primary South Shore resource that can only increase in importance as time evolves. To sever the unity of this nationally significant resource by constructing a noisy and environmentally destructive public transportation system though its center is stupid, decadent and regressive. Once I was Resource Administrator for the Massachusetts Department of National Resources. In this capacity I observed many decadent plans up for proposal. Fortunately, most never saw the light of day.

The South Shore is a wonderful and beautiful place to live — filled with scenic beauty, educational and recreational resources. It is here America began. North and South Streets as well as lower Main Street (Bachelor's Row) in Hingham is linked historically and architecturally to the very foundation of the nation's beginning. For 20 years or more I, as well as many other citizens and public officials worked to authenticate the Hingham resource.

I yell out to Gov. Weld and Kerasiotes to stand back; to take off their political horse blinders; to put aside their egos; their political mandates and all the other foolishness that builds up in those persons who obtain power. I yell out to Gov. Weld and Kerasiotes that we here and about will fight by all that is legal and honorable to protect the foundation of the outstanding residential environment that has survived into four centuries. We will fight strongly to take action to stop the Greenbush proposal which we believe will adversely impact the outstanding resources that make South Shore living worthwhile. Transportation improvements are necessary but not through the very center of a nationally significant resource area.

Secretary Coxe gives nod to landfill's latest filing

After six studies and 4-1/2 years, Environmental Affairs Secretary Trudy Coxe has determined that the latest report filed by Cohasset Heights Landfill properly complies with the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act (MEPA).

Her decision allows CHL to move out of the study stage and into the permitting stage.

"This does not mean that the proposed expansion is hereby approved," Coxe said. "It means that the long review process under MEPA has finally come to an end and that the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) can proceed with its determination whether and/or under what conditions that project can be permitted in accordance with the solid waste regulations and the Solid Waste Master Plan."

CHL, which is off Rte. 3A near the driving range, proposes expanding its facility into 27.5 acres including landfill, recycling and materials processing facilities.

Owner Paul Barry has said he is determined to expand his landfill operations despite local opposition to the project.

Barry recently withdrew a global settlement offer which tied resolving two lawsuits he has launched against the town in with issues surrounding the operation of the current landfill and the planned expansion because town officials could not agree on how to proceed with discussions. Although John McNabb, spokesperson for Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), a citizens' group opposed to the expansion, is upset about Coxe's decision — he conceded that this day was bound to come.

"CHL filed its first environmental notification form on July 15, 1988 and its first environmental impact report in Jan. 1991. Since 1991, CHL has had to file three draft EIRs and three final EIRs, probably the longest period of MEPA review ever for a landfill proposal..."

McNabb said SAFE will lobby the governor's office to impose a moratorium on any additional landfill capacity until the state Solid Waste Master Plan is finalized. He explained that the draft plan concludes that the state has an overcapacity of landfill space which could adversely affect recycling if more landfills are allowed. McNabb said the public can still comment to the DEP on CHL's Comprehensive Site Assessment (CSA). The DEP has until late September to decide whether further environmental studies should be done by CHL to delineate the leachate plume and the potential effect of the landfill on Lily Pond.

"The next step in the permitting process for CHL is to submit a site suitability application with the DEP and the Board of Health," McNabb said. However, it is not clear if CHL will be able to file the application until the CSA process is complete, he said.

Prepare for Storms Before They Hit!

When little showers turn into big storms, your electric service may be interrupted. However, there are some simple measures you can take to help ensure your comfort and safety during a power outage.

Food...Have canned and packaged foods that need no refrigeration. If you have an infant, keep several days' supply of formula. You can extend the life of perishable foods by turning the controls of your refrigerator and freezer to the coldest position before the storm hits. During winter storms, you can use a picnic cooler outside your home to preserve frozen foods. And don't forget your manual can opener.

Water...Clean containers should be filled with tap water in case your electric water pump or area water supply is affected. Also, you can flush a toilet by pouring water into the bowl.

Medical Supplies...You should have a complete first-aid kit. You should also have an adequate supply of prescription drugs or dietary needs.

Cooking...A fireplace or wood stove can be used for cooking. Gas grills or camp stoves should only be used outdoors. Charcoal grills–because they release carbon monoxide, a deadly poison–should NEVER be used indoors.

Lighting...Camper lanterns and battery-operated lights are safer than candles. And keep an adequate supply of fresh batteries. Propane and oil lanterns are useful. But you need to store the fuel in a safe place.

Radio...A battery-operated, portable radio may be the only way you can get up-to-date information on what's going on during and after a serious storm.

Burning Wood for Heat...
If you have a fireplace or wood stove, keep an emergency supply of dry firewood on hand.

Emergency Generator Safety...If you have an emergency electric generator, please follow these safety precautions: the generator must be UL-approved and it should be installed by a licensed electrician and inspected by your municipal wiring inspector. There must be no link between our lines and your generator, because an improperly wired generator could endanger your life and the lives of your neighbors and emergency workers by "backfeeding" electricity from your generator out to the power lines in your neighborhood.

Water Pipes... If your home-heating system is down for an extended period of time due to a winter storm, drain your water pipes and traps. Remember to shut off the main water valve to prevent flooding when the power is restored.

Protect Your Appliances...Turn off and unplug all appliances that would go on automatically when your electricity is restored. This includes your TV, VCR, microwave, dehumidifier, furnace, water heater and water pump. These appliances could be damaged by a brief voltage surge when the power is restored. Legislative task force looks for fairer MBTA formula

By Mark Leccese
Statehouse Bureau

A special task force made up of legislators, transportation officials and community representatives has spent the past six months quietly looking into the finances of the MBTA, and they already agree the T's assessments to cities and towns are "inequitable."

Task force member Rep. Bradley Jones, R-North Reading, said, "We're trying to get information in answer to our questions and we're tossing around ideas, but everybody realizes the assessments are inequitable."

The 78 cities and towns that make up the MBTA area are assessed annually on their "cherry sheets" — the yearly report of state aid to communities and charges communities must pay to the state and to various agencies and authorities.

But 23 communities that have no direct T service must pay an assessment to the MBTA, and 18 communities that receive direct service through commuter rail stops — such as Franklin, Billerica, Rockport and Gloucester — pay no assessment at all.

Jones calls this the "most inequitable" part of MBTA funding.

According to Anne Larner, executive director of the MBTA Advisory Board, which is made up of representatives from the 78 cities and towns, communities that have no direct service but pay an assessment, do receive benefits from MBTA service.

"Originally the theory was that a community that didn't have service but is located in close proximity to a community that does gained a regional benefit," she said. But, she added, because of changes in the MBTA's financial structure in the 30 years since that policy was adopted, "Communities that have minimal service get charged much more than was thought when the formulas were set up."

In 1973, according to Larner, the legislature made the decision not to charge any communities that were added to the MBTA's subway or commuter rail service. Communities argued that any new stations would be used as a regional commuter stop, and the host community should not be charged for a service people from many communities would use.

That argument carried the day. But now, more than 20 years later, with the wide expansion of the T's commuter rail, more and more communities receive direct service but pay no assessment.

Funding for the MBTA comes from four sources, according to Larner. About 17 percent comes from assessments to cities and towns; 22 percent comes from fares; two percent comes from the federal government; and 59 percent comes from the annual state budget.

Jones argues that a resident of North Reading, which pays an MBTA assessment, driving to neighboring Andover, which pays no assessment, to catch a commuter train, "pays four times": to park, to ride the train, through the property tax for the town assessment and through state taxes for the state's funding of the T.

"Now say I live in Andover," Jones said. "I walk to the station and pay the fare. I've only paid twice: the fare and my state taxes."

Over the past seven years, the MBTA line items in the state budget have increased by 97 percent, growing twice as fast as the overall state budget.

With charges to communities capped at a 2.5 percent increase yearly and some of the lowest fares in the nation, the state has been forced to come up with more of the T's operating and capital improvements budget.

The MBTA takes in only 22 percent of its budget through fares. The 30 largest public transit agencies raise an average of 35 percent of their budget through fares.

"I think we may need to get ourselves from 22 percent into the high 20s or low 30s," Jones said.

The task force is expected to present its report, and a piece of legislation containing its recommendations, to the legislature in January of 1996.

In addition to Jones, other legislators on the task force are: Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield; Rep. James DiPaola, D-Malden; Sen. Richard Tisei, R-Wakefield; Sen. Robert Travaglini, D-East Boston; and Sen. W. Paul White, D-Boston.

Among the local officials on the task force are Selectman Yaffa Dratman of Norfolk and Town Administrator Wolfgang Bauer of Franklin.

Since the passage of Proposition 2 1/2 in 1980, the total annual MBTA assessments to cities and towns cannot increase by more than 2 1/2 percent a year.

The MBTA uses a complex series of formulas to determine assessments for individual communities based on what type of service the city or town (or its neighbors) receives, U.S. Census Bureau studies of commuting patterns, number of passengers, and net miles of bus service per year.

Fourteen communities are considered the "inner" service area, and are assessed slightly differently. Those communities are Arlington, Belmont. Boston, Brookline, Cambridge, Chelsea, Everett, Malden, Medford, Milton, Newton, Revere, Somerville, and Watertown.

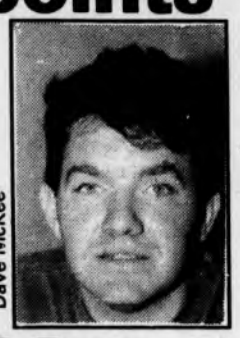
extra points

Joe Reardon



Dave McKee

by Joe & Dave

On Wednesday, July 26 Extra Points crew members Dave McKee and Joe Reardon took part in a field hockey game after being challenged by Marshfield High captains Susan Joyal and Lisa Tingley. The MHS duo were irate over a recent Extra Points column that made fun of their sport. The following is a report on the action.

When someone throws down the gauntlet, or the field hockey stick in this case, any sports writer worth his weight in sweat socks has to respond.

So after a long day of work, Joe and I headed to Hingham High for a 6:30 p.m. field hockey game arranged by Joyal and Tingley (both were members of teams playing in the Mass. South Sectional Summer League.)

I arrived at the field before Joe and met with Joyal and Tingley. They were both very pleasant and provided me with a stick for the game.

As I had never played field hockey before, they quickly went over some of the rules. (The stick cannot be raised above your waist, you can only hit the ball with the front of the stick, you cannot kick the ball, there is no checking, etc.)

I began warming up with some of the players and realized the wooden stick was about the same height as a golf club. I took a nice Vardon grip and began hitting the ball like I was in the fairway at Augusta. I was quickly told I couldn't do that in a game because the stick was above my waist.

I started hitting the ball the correct way and wasn't having much success (I looked like I was beating a dusty rug.) It was going to be a long game.

Joe arrived soon thereafter and was given a stick as well. But being a natural lefty, he was at a disadvantage because left-handed sticks are not allowed in field hockey. He started hitting the ball righty and wasn't having much success either. It was definitely going to be a long game.

Anyway, it was decided that I would play for the Marshfield team while Joe would play for the Hingham team in our 20-minute scrimmage.

One more thing about field hockey, the ball is about the size of a baseball and is made of a substance that is diamond-like. All players wear shin guards and a mouthpiece to protect from getting whacked. Joe and I had neither for the scrimmage.

The action began and I was assigned the center forward position while Joe played midfield.

Even though it was 6:30 p.m., it was more than 90 degrees and the humidity was higher than the crowd at Lolapalooza. I was already sweating like a dog and the game was just starting. As for the real players, they were all in great shape, were barely sweating and could have played all night. I hated them.

Due to the conditions, I made a conscious decision not to hustle and simply goal-hang. I was hoping that my hard-working teammates would somehow

'Big Sticks' just part of Cohasset's water world

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

Dressed in a blue T-shirt, shorts and sunglasses, Hull's Jack Buckley gave the commands from the stern as the seven crew members prepared to guide the 26-foot Monomoy Surf Boat from Government Island out of Cohasset Harbor during Sunday morning's workout.

The rowers who gathered at 8 a.m. had spent the previous 30 minutes pumping a small pool of water from the craft and waited patiently for the tide to come in just a litter further. The harbor was beginning to awake as families packed their sail boats and motor boats for a day on the sea. Temperatures were expected to reach the mid-90s. One could be in worse locations than on a boat in the ocean.

A slight breeze rustled the various flags on the boats and the sound of squawking seagulls and boats revving their engines so early in the morning was a good indication it was going to be a busy day on the sea.

"Oar coming up," the rowers said as they individually stood the oars in a straight-up position before locking them on the side.

The rowers bent at the waist and straightened their oars upon Buckley's "sit ready" command and then "ready all."

On the word "row" the crew leaned back on the oar and pulled the boat away from shore into deeper water.

The "Women With Big Sticks" group was underway.

'Big Sticks' just part of Cohasset's water world

The name of the club is actually something of a misnomer. Men are just as welcomed as the women to join in on the Sunday morning sessions. Call it an equal opportunity rowing club.

The group got its name when, during a workout, the boat passed a lobster boat and one of the men exclaimed, "Look at the women with the big sticks." With those words the group had an identity. T-shirts were made with the name emblazoned on them.

The craft itself can seat up to 12 people. It was restored and painted by Cohasset Junior/Senior High students, many of whom will be members of this fall's newly-founded crew team.

Buckley is the driving force behind restoring the boat house and storing the craft in it. Buckley said he has "no definite information" as to how old the structure is but he does know rowing shells were stored there years ago. He recently obtained three file numbers for waterway permits from the Cohasset Historical Society. Buckley believes the permits may contain information as to the age of the structure.

Buckley has unique plans for the boat house after its renovation. "The real goal is to make it into a place for recreational boating and small boat building," he said. "It's important to keep alive the large part of Cohasset's history in rowing and lifesaving."

For now, Buckley stores gear at his house and at the junior/senior high school. He also said the sailing club has been extremely cooperative by letting him store the boat in its facilities.

center the ball near the net so I could pop in a quick goal.

To help my strategy I started talking trash to the Hingham defenders hoping to distract them. I also pestered them by hooking their stick. (I think that's illegal as well.)

Anyway, the early part of the game was played at midfield. Marshfield and Hingham players, along with a hustling Joe, fought for possession of the ball while I calmly watched the action at the other end of the field.

At one point, I saw Joe fall on his can. He got up laughing. I didn't see what caused the spill but I knew if I fell, I probably wouldn't get up.

About five minutes into the half, the ball somehow bounced in my direction and even though I was twenty yards from the goal I wanted at least one shot before I had a heart attack.

I managed a weak offering and immediately heard a whistle.

"Your stick was above your waist," the ref yelled as she awarded Hingham the ball.

A minute later the ball came in my direction again. As I ran toward it, the whistle blew again.

"Off-sides," the ref yelled. Apparently, my cherry picking was not working too well.

On another scramble near the Hingham goal I was whistled for checking. (Okay, maybe I bumped someone.)

Then just before the half, there was a scramble near the Hingham goal and as I tried to shoot the ball, it hit my foot. (Okay, maybe I kicked it on purpose.)

"Illegal play," the ref yelled after yet another whistle. As I protested in vain, the ref began to laugh. "Nice try," she said.

The half came with the score tied at 0-0. I thought it was a good half as Joe and I still had all our teeth and our shins were free of bruises.

The two teams switched sides for the second half and as the sweat rolled down my body, I began to loaf even more. I wanted to sit down and take a nap but I think that would have been against the rules.

As for Joe, he was still hustling at midfield and I feared he would be crowned by either a stick or an errant shot. Field hockey is a lot rougher than it looks.

Play moved down into the Marshfield end and I didn't even bother to cross midfield. My idea of good defense is a strong offense.

A few minutes later the ball was passed towards me in the Hingham end. As I tried to move past a defender I kicked the ball. The whistle blew to stop play but I didn't bother.

With a few more kicks of my Chuck Taylor sneakers, I moved around the Hingham goalie and kicked the ball into the net. It didn't count but I ran around like I had just scored in the World Cup.

Play resumed and somehow I managed to get into position for a legal shot this time. However, the Hingham goalie kicked it out and the score remained at 0-0.

Then a controversial play took place. After a scramble in front of the Hingham net, I was all alone with the ball five feet from the goalie. I took a shot that appeared to be in but the ref said it missed high and wide. I protested again but to no avail.

Play moved back into the Marshfield end and again I played no defense. Time was winding down and it looked like the game was going to end in a 0-0 tie.

But then lightning struck as my teammates quickly moved the ball into the Hingham end and sent a lovely pass towards me.

I don't know if the Hingham defenders let me in free or what but I found myself on a clean breakaway with nothing between me and glory but the goalie.

I chipped the ball forward and from eight feet hit a low shot to the right. It bounced twice and somehow found paydirt past the goalie.

I raised my stick and kissed it in celebration.

We led 1-0 and time was winding down. At this point, I wanted out of the game. I got my goal and wanted to avoid passing out from dehydration. I also didn't want to lose any teeth so I called for a substitute.

Joe, still hustling at midfield, hung in for the full 20 minutes as I drank some water on the sidelines. The final whistle eventually sounded and the game ended at 1-0.

Both teams shook hands, and Joe and I posed for some pictures with the players, who generously gave us field hockey T-shirts.

Field hockey is one tough sport, and if you don't believe me let someone whack you in the thigh with that rock-ball. It happened to one of the players during the game and I'm still wincing from the memory.

In addition to toughness, field hockey requires great aerobic conditioning and excellent hand-eye coordination. I know this because I have neither.

Therefore, there will be no more 'dissin' field hockey players. The sport may have some weird rules and even weirder equipment, but the athletes who play it work as hard as anyone.

Now leave us alone for a while, Joe and I need to rest up.

—David McKee

* * * * *

Finally, I can breath a sigh of relief. My own "Fish out of Water Week" is officially over. Actually, I thought it ended last Wednesday on the scorching fields of Hingham High when the Marshfield and Hingham field hockey squads transformed me into a human sweat ball.

Sunday was going to be different, or so I thought. My assignment was to write a feature on the recreational rowing group "Women with Big Sticks." I pictured myself sitting at the bow of the 26-foot Monomoy Surf Boat, scribbling away in my notebook as the crew glided the craft gracefully out of Cohasset Harbor into the open seas.

But, this was not my week. When Jack Buckley, the founder and director of the Cohasset Maritime Institute, who was skippering the boat, suggested I take a turn with one of the "big sticks" (known outside Cohasset's town line as an oar) my ability to adapt to a foreign situation was tested once again. And once again it was painfully obvious I was in over my head.

Like field hockey, rowing a boat with a team is much tougher than it looks. After nearly capsizing the big-sticked women I took my place near the back, locked my oar in and began my crash course in rowing.

The main objective is to stay synchronized with the rest of the crew. The eight oars going in and out of the water should make the sound of a single oar. I was fairly successful getting the knack of this, thanks to Buckley's instructions from the bow. Still, more often than not, I was banging oars with the rower in front of me as I tried desperately to stay in synch with the group.

After docking, Buckley recommended I write my feature using the "first person" format. It was a good idea and I did consider it. But the title would have ruined the feature: "Ernest Goes to Sea."

Cohasset softball catcher Andi Shaughnessy is all smiles after throwing out five runners in one game.

Softballers run streak into playoffs

Cohasset's softball team finished its regular summer season with three straight wins to bring its record to 6-3. Abby Murphy's stellar performance against Whitman last Monday with the bat and the glove played a major role in Cohasset's 14-7 win. Murphy had three hits and five RBI. In the fifth inning, she followed up a lunging catch of a pop foul by snaring a sharply hit line drive to third base.

Leslie Thornton's unassisted putout at first base along with Kerry McCarthy's outstanding catch in left field (her second of the game), and Murphy's nifty grab of another pop fly killed a Whitman rally in the sixth and sealed the season-ending victory. Beth Smoot and Maggie O'Neil shared the pitching duties and each had strong games. Megan Cox, who moved between second, shortstop, and third base with ease because of her sure hands and strong arm, anchored the Cohasset infield. Courtney Anton, who scored what turned out to be the winning run, and Kristen Devine, who had two hits, two runs, and three runs batted in, played key roles in the Cohasset offense.

Last Thursday night was Kellie Straughn Night in Whitman as Cohasset's pitcher struck out eight in the team's 15-8 victory. She also contributed three hits. Andi Shaughnessy and Sarah Donovan also had three hits. Sarah Motley's bases-loaded double cleared the bases and broke the game open in the sixth inning. Motley's defense that inning was just as impressive. The shortstop had a hand in each of Whitman's three outs. She grabbed a scorching line drive and threw runners out at third and first on hard-hit ground balls.

Maureen Equi, the consummate team player, played first base, outfield and catcher. The team's No. 3 hitter all season batted four times and reached base four times. Her speed, agility, hitting and throwing ability, and her willingness to play any position, have made her a tremendous asset to the team.

Wednesday night, Cohasset beat North Randolph 25-18 in another barn burner of a game. The hit of the game came from Leslie Thornton who smashed a double to left field with the bases loaded, driving in three runs. Clara Sceery played a solid game at third base, but it was her daring base running that ignited the Cohasset team when she sped home and slid under the catcher's tag on a very close play at the plate.

Cohasset's excellent summer season has earned it a second seed in the playoff round.

Among the six drivers singled out for special recognition for driving patients to appointments 40 or more times during the year were Hingham resident William Smith and Cohasset resident Osborne Ingram.

Others honored for driving 20 or more times included Cohasset residents John Campbell, Murray Campbell, Ed and Priscilla Long, Doug Peck, Sally Prentice and Susan McVeigh. Hingham residents included Helen Gustafson and John McGrath.

Mary Lee Bermand serves as treasurer for the "hotline" service, assisted by Joanne Hornstra. Both are Hingham residents.

The Grand Tour

with Ginger Ferenz, 383-2863

The Fortier home at 16 Margin Court is bright with summertime color. The stone walls surrounding the yard are the perfect spot for stone troughs planted with pink and white petunias while a border of pink and white impatiens frames the front yard.

Lighthouse lens may come home to Cohasset

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

The Minot's Light Replica on Government Island could become even more authentic if the town can obtain the only surviving classical lens from the lighthouse.

But the sticky point is the Coast Guard has valued the Fresnel lens at $250,000 and wants the town to insure it for that amount.

"That's a substantial figure and the potential for premiums could be rather significant," Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon said.

Selectmen approved a loan agreement with the Coast Guard this week with the conditions that the value of the lens be placed at $1 and the town not assume any transportation costs.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said the town would not want to pay any insurance at all on the lens and said he hoped the "Coast Guard would give up on the insurance part of the agreement."

The lens, which is in poor condition, only fits Minot's Light, Brown said.

The Cohasset Historical Commission, a town board, has spearheaded the effort to construct the Minot's Ledge Lighthouse Replica on Government Island and lobbied the Coast Guard for a used lens.

Commission member Hamilton Tewksbury said through another contact he was referred to Gail Fuller,

9-1-1 gets rave reviews from local safety officials

By James Loewenstein
Mariner correspondent

This spring, when Cohasset residents were first able to dial "9-1-1" to summon emergency aid, police received a distress call from the victim of a domestic assault.

However, she was not able to communicate to police where she was because the "guy ripped the phone out of the wall," said Police Chief Brian Noonan.

Police, however, knew exactly where to find her, because as soon as the dispatcher answered her call, he could see her address light up on a computer screen in front of him, Noonan said.

The dispatcher then sent two cruisers to the scene of the assault, he said.

Uncommon Common a cinch for national listing

By James Loewenstein
Mariner correspondent

A key state official said Tuesday she is sure that the Massachusetts Historical Commission will vote to list the Cohasset Common Historical District on the prestigious National Register of Historic Places.

Betty Friedberg, National Register director at the Massachusetts Historical Commission, also said that after the vote on Sept. 13, the application will be sent to the National Park Service for listing on the National Register.

Friedberg made her prediction at a public meeting on the proposal, held at Cohasset Town Hall on Tuesday (Aug. 8).

She and other officials from the Massachusetts Historical Commission spent much of the meeting addressing the concerns of residents, who wanted to know if being listed on the National Register would mean more government regulation.

Building projects in the Historic District, consisting of the Common and the buildings that surround it, are already regulated by the Cohasset Common Historic Commission. The Cohasset Common Historic Commission "can require a modification of a design if it is (architecturally) inappropriate," said David Wadsworth, who is National Register coordinator for the Cohasset Historical Commission.

However, state officials at the meeting said there will be no additional restrictions placed on homeowners if the District is listed on the National Register.

Changes in Title V don't dam flood of criticism from public

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

The mixed reaction to the recently announced changes in Title V regulations indicates that the Weld administration will not receive clear sailing on the stormy issue any time soon.

Critics continue to call for an end to Title V altogether, and while business leaders generally support the new rules, representatives of the state's powerful real estate and construction industries nonetheless say more regulatory change is needed.

An official of the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), which wrote the Title V regulations, also praised the changes.

On the other hand, environmentalists, who had endorsed the original Title V standards, now contend that the administration has taken a step away from its original commitment to clean water.

Announced last week by Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci, the new rules apply to the 600,000 — about one quarter — of Massachusetts households with septic tanks and took effect Aug. 2.

The biggest change is that working septic systems and cesspools located within 50 feet of surface (non-drinkable) water will no longer automatically fail. Septic systems within 100 feet of drinking water

Cohasset's week

Board members wanted

Selectmen put out the call this week for three volunteers to serve on the town's drug and alcohol committee.

Any interested citizens should stop by the selectmen's office or call the office at 383-9900.

Liquor license rejected

For the second time in two years, selectmen turned down a request for a liquor license at the Olde Salt House at Cohasset Harbor.

Selectman Jane Goedecke cited the "congested highly residential neighborhood," the outside seating, and the extra strain this would put on the police force as reasons that outweigh any benefits the town might see through improved business at the restaurant.

But Sohier Street resident Robert V. Davenport, who lives near the Music Circus, said selectmen were being inconsistent.

He said selectmen didn't appear to have the same concerns about the police department and neighborhood that abuts the Music Circus, which obtained a liquor license last year.

Paula Knowles of Border Street spoke against granting the license before Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said the board would not hear any more statements pro or con. The public hearing on the matter was closed on Aug. 7 when selectmen took the request under advisement. Brown said he didn't realize that opinions were going to be offered on the license when he recognized Davenport.

Selectman Peter Pratt noted that Davenport's and Knowles' comments occurred after the board had voted and therefore did not influence its decision.

In explaining his vote, Pratt said "the open area of the premises lends itself to being a difficult area to control."

Selectman Merle Brown said noise could be increased in the area if alcoholic beverages were served.

Selectman Martha K. Gjesteby said the conditions that existed two years ago when owner Tom Eisenstadt first applied have not changed.

Selectman Michael H. Sullivan was not at the meeting.

One-day license OK'ed

This week selectmen issued a one-day liquor license to the George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118 for its Sept. 9 Christine Burke Scholarship Fund Clambake. Rain date for the event is Sept. 10.

Ambulance billing update

In July, the fire department billed for 29 ambulance transports for a total of $9,887.54; receipts deposited with the town treasurer over the same period were $7,606.93.

Sidewalk committee meets

The sidewalk committee has identified the following streets for additional sidewalks: King Street from 3A to Beechwood; Norman Todd Road and Beechwood from Norman Todd Road to South Main; Pond Street from 3A to King Street; Forest Avenue, Beach Street, Atlantic Avenue, and Jerusalem Road from Atlantic to Forest Avenue.

According to a report to selectmen from chairman Peter H. Pearce, 23 Forest Notch — Harold Litchfield will contact the Norfolk Country surveyors and request they provide the committee with engineering drawings needed to solicit preliminary bids.

Pearce said the committee spoke with state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray who said she will attach a request for funding the project to the next state appropriation bond bill.

"Where Quality Matters"

Lighthouse lens may come home to Cohasset

curator, U.S. Coast Guard, who said one of "the" lenses from Minot's Light is available.

Hamilton said he believes it's the second lens used at the lighthouse.

"I understand the selectmen's point of view," he said. "Money is tight and they don't want to pay insurance on $250,000.

"But I hope this doesn't goof up the whole thing."

Tewksbury said he will call Fuller, who is on vacation, next week to discuss the matter.

He explained that the policy of the Coast Guard is to loan items and not give them away. It may take an act of Congress to have the lens donated, Tewksbury said.

The Commission is considering contacting U.S. Congressman Gerry Studds (D-Cohasset) about the situation.

The granite blocks, which were part of Minot's Light and were used to construct the replica, are still the property of the Coast Guard, Tewksbury noted.

"They let you have it but it's still theirs," he explained.

The lens was found on a Coast Guard ship in New Bedford and is now stored in several boxes in Forestville, Maryland.

Even if it's not the entire lens, the commission wants it.

"It would still go into the replica as a piece of history," Tewksbury said.

At one time Fresnel lenses, named after the French physicist A.J. Fresnel, were used in every lighthouse in the country.

The lens is an intricate series of pieces of glass that turns a very small light into a very large light, Tewksbury said.

He said the Commission plans to install the lens in the replica and be able to flash 1-4-3.

Common a cinch for register

tional oversight to the actions of private property owners," Friedberg told some 20 members of the public at the meeting.

A listing on the National Register "is primarily an honorary designation," she said.

A listing will also make town boards "think twice" before doing something that would harm a National Register District, she said.

Property owners in the District can choose to not have their residence listed, the Massachusetts Historical Commission said. Also, if most of the property owners object to being listed, the district will not be included on the National Register, the Commission said.

The District includes the 1713 Joseph Bates house, the 1722 Unitarian Parish house, the 1747 Meeting House, the 1824 Second Congregational Church, and the 1857 Town Hall.

The District includes "some of the town's most stately homes" and features buildings from the Georgian, Federal and Greek Revival styles of architecture, Wadsworth has written.

The Massachusetts Historical Commission (MHC) can review any proposed federally-funded project — for example a highway — to ensure that it does not harm the historical nature of a National Register Historic District, said Terry Adams, preservation planner at the MHC.

However, the MHC is limited to an advisory role when it conducts its reviews, said Adams. It has no power to veto or alter a project, he said.

"We do not stop projects," he said. "If we cannot agree" with the agency undertaking the project, "the project goes forward," he said.

When asked if homeowners ever complain after the area they live in is listed on the National Register, Friedberg replied, "We don't hear complaints after listings."

Cohasset mosquito update

The Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee reports that dry weather conditions during June and July resulted in fewer mosquitoes during these months. Mosquitoes need water to breed and most breeding sites remained dry during this period.

However, residents living near wetlands or brooks and ditches blocked by overgrowths of vegetation may have received little relief from the nasty pests during the dry period. In addition, residents should be aware that short periods of heavy rainfall can leave areas wet long enough for mosquitoes to breed.

If mosquitoes are biting in your neighborhood you can protect yourself in two ways. First, by eliminating sources of stagnant water where mosquitoes can breed such as clogged gutters and ditches, old tires, outdoor buckets and children's wading pools. Secondly, by protecting yourself when outdoors during peak mosquito feeding hours of early morning and early evening by wearing long sleeve shirts and long pants and using insect repellent that includes DEET. When using insect repellent, be advised that the state Department of Public Health recommends that the concentration of DEET be no more than 15 percent for adults and for children 10 percent or less. Parents are advised that DEET should never be used on infants.

If you need further advice or assistance regarding mosquito control, please call the Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee at the Board of Health, 383-9900 ext. 120. Additional information about mosquito control and the safe use of insect repellents is available in the lobby of Town Hall directly across from the Recreation Department office.

9-1-1 gets rave reviews from local officials

June, is working "absolutely wonderfully," said dispatcher David Weeks.

Noonan said he is "more than happy with it" and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said, "It's great."

In Cohasset, dialing "9-1-1" does more than summon the police, firefighters or an ambulance.

As a dispatcher answers a 9-1-1 call, he immediately sees before him on a computer screen the address from which the call was made, police say. Also displayed on the screen is the name of the person or business in whose name the phone is listed, police say.

Dispatchers say that because they already know where the emergency is taking place, they don't have to spend time questioning the caller in order to determine where to send a cruiser, fire truck, or ambulance.

"We're able to dispatch faster," said dispatcher Sasha Geddes.

Noonan said 9-1-1 calls have increased from 67 in June to 90 in July, which he attributed to efforts in Cohasset to educate students and the elderly about the service.

Noonan said that occasionally incorrect information about the caller appears on the computer screen. That has occurred 13 times since Cohasset started its 9-1-1 service, he said.

In the majority of cases, a wrong name appeared on the screen or something else was incorrect about the name, he said.

Incorrect addresses were not a common problem, he said.

Erroneous information appears on the computer screen because there are errors in the computer's database, which is derived from information provided by the town assessor's office and the phone company, he said.

None of the errors caused "a delay in response" by emergency personnel, he said.

If an incorrect address did show up on the screen, dispatchers would catch the error at the time of the 9-1-1 call, because they routinely ask callers to state their address, police said.

Dispatchers correct the error immediately by faxing the correct information to NYNEX, Noonan said.

Another small problem is that occasionally small children mistakenly push a "speed-dial" button that has been set to 9-1-1, said Joan Sullivan, a 9-1-1 dispatcher in Hingham.

If a dispatcher calls back and can't reach the parents, "sometimes we send a cruiser" to investigate, she said.

Before Cohasset installed a 9-1-1 system, callers who wished to summon emergency aid dialed a seven-digit number to either the Police or Fire department, officials said.

When 9-1-1 was installed, the town established a central dispatching center at the police station to handle both fire and police calls.

The 9-1-1 equipment was paid for by NYNEX, which used funds it had raised by charging for directory assistance calls, Noonan said. The state passed a law in 1990 providing a state-wide enhanced 9-1-1 service and set up the Statewide Emergency Telecommunications Board (SETB) to oversee the system.

Cohasset hired three full-time and three part-time civilian dispatchers to staff the dispatching center, said Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon. In addition, the town spent some $40,000 to on new equipment to upgrade the dispatching center, he said.

In the past, Cohasset officials have considered joining together with Scituate, Hull, Norwell and Hingham to create a single, regional dispatching center to handle all emergency calls from those towns.

The plans were part of the proposed Seaside Fire and Rescue District, a five-town regional fire district studied with money from a state grant. Selectman Jane Goedecke said this week selectmen would discuss the status of proposed district soon.

Chief Lincoln explained that towns had to "break away" from regionalizing to set up enhanced 9-1-1 because of the state deadline last spring.

"If you're not ready when the state is, you go to the bottom of the list," he said.

Even though Cohasset now has its own dispatching center, Merle Brown, chairman of the selectmen, said he still thinks "it would be very advantageous to regionalize."

"Cohasset selectmen have been the most vocal advocates in this part of the state for regionalization of 9-1-1 (dispatching)," said selectman Peter Pratt. "I think Cohasset selectmen will push for regional police and fire communications yet again."

Although Cohasset would have to spend money in the short term to regionalize — regionalization over the long term would enable Cohasset and other towns to save "some money," Brown said.

For example, the Fire Department radio systems in Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate and Hull currently do not work well in all geographic areas, he said. There are "dead spots" in all towns, including Cohasset, he said.

"It would be very expensive for Cohasset to buy a a fire radio system. But it's relatively cheap to get a radio system on a regional basis," Pratt said.

Although the town did improve the radio system substantially recently by moving the antenna from the fire station to the top of a hill, it is "still not a full, public-safety grade system," he said.

Chief Lincoln explained that "dead spots" because of out-croppings of ledge.

"It's always been a problem," he said.

Cohasset would also save on personnel costs if it regionalized, Brown said. While Cohasset currently has one dispatcher on duty at the police station, a regional dispatch center serving four towns would require only about two or three dispatchers to be on duty at a given time, so Cohasset's personnel costs would be reduced, he said.

But Hingham Lt. Charles Souther said regionalizing dispatching is not a good idea. He said it would be more likely for a dispatcher to make errors if he fielded calls from several towns instead of just one. For example, he said, every town has a Main Street and if a dispatcher sent a police cruiser or fire truck to the wrong town, it would "become dangerous."

But Pratt said that there are much larger regional dispatch systems in the United States than the five-town system being considered, so the question of increased dispatcher errors has already been addressed, he said.

Noonan said "the only drawback I can see" to regionalizing is that Cohasset and the other towns now have their own dispatching centers and have already spent tens of thousands of dollars to update their dispatching equipment. If the town was going to regionalize, "it should have been done before," he said.

Town fees are waived for water main work

By Alison Shyer
Mariner correspondent

Two weeks after contractors threatened to halt work on the Forest Avenue water main project, selectmen Monday voted to waive the controversial street-opening fees at the heart of the conflict.

Describing the incident as having "escalated quickly" and unnecessarily, Selectman Jane Goedecke said the matter was a misunderstanding which may have "fermented too long" due to the board's summer schedule of meeting every two weeks.

In what appears to have been a series of ambiguities and miscalculations, C.J.P. & Sons Construction was informed that it would be assessed $4,500 for each street opened, for a total of $13,500, numbers that both Selectman Peter Pratt and Water Commission Chairman Fred Koed agree are now largely inaccurate.

Aside from an apparent miscalculation of the size of the opening, which might account for the figure being too high, there is the issue of why the town would charge itself such a large sum.

The confusion stemmed, in part, from the working of the regulations, adopted by selectmen in 1991, regarding the fees. The words "shall not be applied to any department of the town" were apparently not initially thought to be broad enough to exempt the contractor who was hired by the water department.

Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon, who was responsible for billing the contractor, said he considered C.J.P. & Sons as an outside contractor and was informed that it would be responsible for the fees incurred in the project. The bill, Doyon said, was sent to C.J.P. before the work was started.

In a July 25 letter to selectmen, C.J.P. asked for a refund of the $4,500 it paid for the street opening permit on Forest Avenue and asked that similar fees for street opening permits on Atlantic Avenue and Beechwood Street be waived or it would stop work.

Town Counsel Richard A. Henderson told selectmen this week they could waive fees for town departments. This project qualifies because it's being done for the water department, he explained.

Resident engineer Dave Daikh checks the progress of water main work on Forest Avenue. Selectmen decided this week to waive street opening fees charged to the contractor doing the work for the water department.

Selectman Peter Pratt called the incident a "donnybrook" and blamed a series of "miscommunications" but defend Cohasset's street opening fees as necessary to protect Cohasset's "single greatest investment": its roadways.

He said revenue from openings, would be used to create "progressive, well-thought-out infrastructure management" and would help buy more advanced computers to map out the location of the utilities, technology that Cohasset does not currently have.

The regulations are also justifiable, Pratt said, because the town incurs at least as much as it charges to oversee any of these projects.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown explained the town charges street opening permit fees to protect town roads. He explained that sometimes utility companies, for example, do not properly reconstruct and resurface the road once it's been opened.

In response to a letter from Tutela Engineering comparing street opening costs of neighboring towns which found that Cohasset's is the highest on the South Shore, Pratt said that he is "professionally concerned."

"I am absolutely enraged at Tutela Engineering (the firm contracted by the town for the water distribution upgrades and repair) that they did not understand on the front end what was going on here," he said. "They should have thought this through instead of just coming to us and saying 'your fees are too high.'"

Dominick Tutela says that he "totally agrees with Pratt's aims" and only prepared the study to establish the mind-set of the contractor. "Most communities don't charge as much — and maybe they should — but we didn't mean to say that Cohasset was charging too much, we just wanted to show why the contractor was expecting the fee to be nominal."

Storage tank helps protect million-dollar landscaping

By Alison Shyer
Mariner correspondent

After about a dozen warnings from Cohasset about violating the month-old outdoor watering ban, Peter Roy last week installed a water storage tank on his Margin Street property.

The tank, which will be filled during permissible watering hours (10 p.m. to 6 a.m.), will help maintain the Roys' landscaping with some say is worth over $1 million.

According the Police Chief Brian Noonan, the Roys had about "8 or 10 or 12" visits from the police before the new regulations authorizing the water department to levy fines against violators went into effect last Tuesday (Aug. 1).

Noonan added that the police, who have not yet issued any tickets, hoped to encourage Cohasset residents to voluntarily abide by the restrictions.

"We haven't come to a point where we've felt compelled to issue a ticket," he said.

"But I have to give (the Roys) credit, they are really going to great lengths to comply (with the ban)."

Although the Roys have recently complied with current restrictions, they have not always been as eager to cooperate. The Mariner has received several letters and phone calls from Cohasset residents who were concerned about the Roys' apparent disregard of the town's watering ban. And on July 17, their lawyer Charles Humphreys sent a letter to the selectmen and water commission, formally objecting to the ban.

"(My clients) will not accept a broad, general ban with is not based upon the inadequacy of water or the distribution of water but rather on either a political or misguided perception of water management," the letter stated.

The letter said the Roys had spent "great sums" on landscaping and were prepared to take legal action against the town for any damages to their property.

"(The ban) results in extensive damage and destruction...(and) fails to meet the responsibilities of the water department to provide its customers with adequate water."

The letter also emphasized the Roys' willingness to abide by an abbreviated ban and suggested that the restricted times differ for those living in unaffected areas.

"If restrictions are necessary, they should be placed during the peak hour period in the areas of Town which have distribution problems," the letter said.

Humphreys said the Roys' compliance did not necessarily mean that they would not pursue legal action against the town.

"This is a case of an inhabitant solving a problem the town should be solving," he said. "The town did nothing for the Roys."

Noonan said that Mary Lou Roy of Jerusalem Rd, also named as one of Humphreys' clients in the letter has been "very good" about complying with the ban.

Calls to Peter Roy of Margin Street were not returned.

WARNING TO STASZKO

Donald Stazsko, who owns Cohasset Plaza, will receive a letter of warning in connection with an illegal watering incident last Wednesday (August 2), water commissioners said.

After police were alerted by a Stop & Shop patron, Cohasset Water Project Manger Dick Cohan was called to the scene. Behind the supermarket was an open hydrant feeding water to about 100 feet of hose that was apparently being used to water trees.

Cohan confiscated the 2-1/2 inch reducer that was being used to facilitate the use of the hose, valued at $60. There will be no ticket issued, but the reducer will not be returned.

"We wanted to send a message," he said.

Stop & Shop wants to hoist Old Glory

The Zoning Board of Appeals last week agreed to consider a request to erect an extra tall flagpole at Stop & Shop.

Wallace St. John and Richard Avery told the ZBA that an 80-foot tall flagpole with yard arms is proposed for the shopping center.

An American flag measuring 12 by 18 feet will fly at the top, while state and town flags measuring eight by 12 feet are planned for the yard arms.

Permission is necessary because Cohasset only allows 30-foot tall flagpoles as a matter of right.

Wallace said that a number of flagpoles in town are over 60-feet tall, including several at private houses and one on the town common.

In response to a question from committee chairman Myrna Putziger, Wallace said the plaza does not contain any impediments which would obscure a standard height flagpole.

When Wallace said advertising messages would never fly from the flagpole, several committee members told him that was something he could not guarantee in the future.

A decision on the matter will likely be issued by the next ZBA meeting on Sept. 7.

Tutela also stressed that it was only at the behest of the water commission that he wrote the letter.

"No one involved with the original contract was aware that such a large fine would be assessed, or it would have been reflected," he said.

The Forest Avenue water main installation project is on schedule and may even be finished before Labor Day, officials said.

The program, run by the National Conference, Greater Boston Region, trains high school youth leaders to present Green Circle, an early diversity education program, to elementary school students. Through a series of three presentations, the elementary students gain an understanding of how to make decisions that include people in their circle of "caring, sharing and respect." Mending the rules

When the outcry over Title V septic system restrictions began this spring, many balked at the rush to water down the rules.

Title V, after all, had been drafted after numerous public hearings and months of discussions at the local and state level. Title V was formulated to protect the state's groundwater and drinking water supplies, and it was meant to bring thousands of antiquated septic systems into the 20th century.

Once the rules were in place, however, it was clear they had put a huge financial and emotional burden on many homeowners, with some communities finding that as many as half of the private septic systems failed inspections under the new rules.

Now the administration has recommended more than 20 revisions to Title V which will loosen up some guidelines without destroying the protections the regulations have put in place.

For example, septic systems that are close to water supplies — but which pass inspection — now can be approved under a "non-complying but functioning" category, instead of being rejected outright because of their location.

The revisions replace "by definition" failures with certain criteria that must be applied to each system before it can be failed.

The earlier rules, which took effect March 31, failed any septic system within certain distances of watershed, wells or rivers and streams, including systems in working order.

Other revisions include lengthening the amount of time inspections remain valid and extending the time available for upgrading, abolishing setback requirements from recreational water supplies for existing homes; allowing more types of fills to be utilized; eliminating the requirement that additions to homes in which the effluent would not be increased be inspected, and allowing homes located in areas that have "real plans" for municipal sewerage within two years to be exempt from any inspection requirement.

There are other changes too.

For instance, now before the legislature is the Open Space Bond Bill which would set aside $30 million for low-interest loans to homeowners to upgrade their septic systems.

Another proposal calls for a state tax credit of up to $2,500 for those homeowners who must upgrade their systems.

And, there is a proposal which would require local health boards first to get approval from the state Department of Environmental Protection before imposing standards more stringent than those contained in the uniform inspection code.

Sen. Robert Hedlund, D-Weymouth, and other Republican legislators, had urged the governor's office to bring some reasoned alternatives to the Title V restrictions.

Hedlund quipped that residents who live within the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority district — whose water and sewer rates in recent years have soared with the costs of the Boston Harbor cleanup — began to count their blessings when hearing of tales of upgrading septic systems to the tune of $20,000 to $40,000.

These revisions are a first step in mending the rules, not bending them in an effort to bring relief to property owners and to promote further protection of our fragile environment.

And, as a result of the regulatory quagmire created with the implementation of the Title V regulations last March, House Minority Leader Ed Teague of Yarmouth has filed a bill to require a cost-benefit analysis before any new state regulations are promulgated.

His bill is trying to legislate common sense.

State's school districts to share $3 billion

About $3.2 billion in local aid for education will be coming to regional school districts and cities and towns throughout the state for fiscal 1996, according to the state Department of Revenue.

The local aid, also known as "cherry sheet" figures, is an increase of $267.8 million over last year. The local aid figures are called "cherry sheets" because they are printed on pink paper.

The 9.2 increase in local aid for the schools reflects increases in education reform aid and lottery money. Lottery aid increased $51 million, coming in at a total of $442. 6 million and money allocated for education reform increased by $209.3 million, to $1.8 billion, according to the state.

Newcomers' Club donates to area organizations

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers' Club has made donations to four different organizations, totaling nearly $1,700.

In keeping with the club's tradition of making a gift to a cause or organization locally, the club presented checks of $350 to the Scituate Library and the Cohasset Parent Student Organization. Title V revisions offer hope to builders and realtors

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner Staff

Four months into the state's new Title V or clean water regulations local boards of health, realtors and builders are faced with increased paperwork, decreased home sales and delayed or abandoned remodelling and renovation projects.

The regulations, which went into effect on March 31, require board of health inspections on septic systems in homes for sale within nine months of all title transfers. Homeowners, who take out building permits for additions and renovations to their homes increasing the number of bedrooms, will also be subject to inspection.

The push by local legislators for Title V revisions has offered some encouragement to real estate brokers and homeowners trying to sell on the South Shore, but Cohasset Health Agent Dr. Godzik said he's not sure how meaningful they will be for area homeowners.

Some of the changes being proposed include creating a new inspection category other than the "pass", "fail" and "conditional pass" grades that currently are used; limiting to 10 percent the value of the property to cost of repair or replacement of a septic system that fails inspection; and giving town meetings authority to approve more stringent septic system regulations by local boards of health than the state currently imposes.

Godzik said his office has been swamped with work since Title V went into affect.

"We've basically been overwhelmed by this thing," he said.

Making matters worse, selectmen recently cut the health department secretary's schedule by five hours leaving the office even more short-handed. The extra paperwork and septic system inspections have interfered with many of the department's more routine duties, Godzik said.

"A lot isn't getting done."

As for changes to Title V, Godzik said he will reserve judgement on the proposed revisions until they are final.

But Judy Parsons, a real estate broker with Hunneman & Company - Coldwell Banker in Cohasset said she's very encouraged by Title V revisions.

"We have our fingers crossed that the revisions will help increase sales," she said.

Parsons said the regulations have meant fewer buyers this spring and summer and fewer home sales.

"According to Parsons Title V has had the most dramatic impact on the real estate market that she has seen in her 12 years with Hunneman.

Area builders too have been affected by the regulations.

Local builder Terry McNulty would also like to see some revisions to Title V regulations. According to McNulty, under the current rules any room added to a home that is not a bathroom or a kitchen is considered a bedroom and requires a septic system inspection and possible upgrade.

Homeowners hoping to put on $30,000 addition, who then have to spend an another $15,000 on septic system improvement, often postpone the project or abandon it all together, McNulty said.

"It's hurt my business," he said. "You can't do the work you want to do."

Often times after pricing out a project, a homeowner decides that they can't afford an extra $10,000 or $15,000.

Fortunately, McNulty said that a lot of work he's done has been within "sewer" areas, but he said he's lost at least three jobs amounting to $75,000 due to Title V regulations.

"It's tough to deal with," he said, noting that the first question he asks a potential client is: "Are you on the sewer?"

Still, McNulty said he's for the regulations and has been prepared for them for quite some time.

"They do have to clean up these systems," he said.

Hingham Developer Thomas Hastings said his business has also been affected by Title V regulations. Hastings noted that he abandoned an earlier plan to develop an area near Scituate Harbor because of the regulations but ,like McNulty, he has work in sewered areas.

Hastings said he's glad to see the push for revisions by the Weld administration and hopes that along with it will come a standardization of health codes on septic systems throughout the state. In Hingham, where many homeowners pushed to keep septic systems and felt sewer lines would eliminate zoning barriers and lead to rampant development, many are finding it difficult to sell. Hastings said he does not want the regulations to be abused as a device to limit growth.

Changes in Title V don't dam flood of criticism . . .

supplies will no longer fail, but cesspools within that distance must be replaced, even if they continue to work.

The changes also give greater leeway to local health boards over declaring a septic system failed and allow homeowners more time to make repairs. Provisions to extend Title V to the state's 50,000 businesses with septic systems have been postponed until July, 1, 1996.

"It's political Prozac," Marshfield lawyer Frank McGee said. "It really solves nothing. They hope the natives will be calmed down by this."

He urged that the whole issue be scrapped in favor of case by case septic system reviews.

Hingham resident Gail Cadigan, who has a failed cesspool, agrees.

"This revision is another farce," she stated. "The whole thing is ludicrous."

Cadigan said that the Plymouth-based citizen's group, FLUSH Title V, will proceed with a class action lawsuit against the state to throw the rules out.

The regulations also drew fire from a different direction.

A spokesman for the Massachusetts Audubon Society, which with 55,000 member households claims to be New England's largest environmental organization, said the new rules will increase pollution and threaten public health.

"This is a big step backward," John J. Clarke, advocacy director, said. "We are adamantly opposed to this."

He accused the Weld administration of caving in to pressure from other politicians and business leaders.

Not surprisingly, business leaders disagreed.

Richard Healey, president of the Boston-based Massachusetts Association of Realtors, had pushed for changes in Title V.

"We're pretty encouraged about what we've seen so far," he said. "They are being much more realistic."

With 15,000 members working for 4,000 firms, the association is influential in the states' real estate industry, which saw $7.5 billion in residential sales last year.

William Habib, a lobbyist for the 2,000-member Massachusetts Homebuilders Association, in Boston, echoed those sentiments.

"We applaud the changes because they are based on performance and not proximity," he said. "It (Title V) was hurting a lot of people for reasons that were not scientifically sound. They have unshackled the people (homeowners) who represent a large portion of our market."

Donna Brooks O'Neil, owner of Preferred Properties in Norwell, and past president of the Pembroke-based Plymouth County Board of Realtors, said, "Obviously it's good that they have made some changes."

She reported that Title V has caused a shortage of houses older houses in the $200,000 price range. Because any failed system must be fixed, she reported that some people simply decided not to put their houses up for sale out of fear that their systems might not pass.

It's political Prozac. It really solves nothing. They hope the natives will be calmed down by this.

Marshfield lawyer Frank McGee

O'Neil called Title V counterproductive, since many failing systems go undetected. "It's just not right. It's inequitable and it's ineffective," she stated.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R.-Weymouth, was one of the Title V's most vocal legislative critics. He had cosponsored legislation earlier that included many of the changes adopted last week.

Hedlund noted that three towns in his district - Cohasset, Scituate and Marshfield - had among the highest failure rates in the state.

He predicted that the failure rates would go down significantly with the new rules and predicted that the DEP will now speed up the process through which alternative technologies are approved.

"It's a passage that moves everything in the right direction" he said. "I'm glad they've made these revisions."

According to Te Leone, a DEP spokesman, as of July, Cohasset and Scituate each reported septic system failure rates of 37 percent, while Weymouth had a 40 percent rate, (based on a very small, 15, number of tests); Hingham indicated a 13 percent failure rate, while other area towns, such as Canton, Braintree, Norwell and Marshfield, did not report. Leone called the survey results incomplete, but said they did offer some basis for comparison.

Scituate health agent Jennifer Lamb expressed frustration over the changes.

"All they create in my mind are more questions. It doesn't make it easier," she said, adding that basic terms such as 'pollution' and 'economic hardship' still need to be defined.

Stating that the health board has yet to receive the changes officially from DEP, Lamb seemed irritated when told a reporter had a copy. "How come you get them and we don't?" she grumbled.

Dean Spencer, acting director of DEP, called the revisions "a good package of changes" that "addresses most of the concerns we've heard."

Meanwhile, Clarke, of the Audubon Society, charged that the decision to revise Title V was a political one.

"It's politics going on at the State House," Clarke charged, adding that 60 percent of all Massachusetts water bodies are polluted and that septic systems are the leading culprit.

He deplored the relaxation in the distance between septic systems and water bodies, stating, "This isn't an environmental code. This is designed to protect the public health. To say that one is extreme because you shouldn't flush your toilet into your neighbor's well is certainly a questionable attitude."

Healey praised the fact that the new rules no longer automatically fail functioning septic systems located near bodies of water. Instead, homeowners will no longer have to move or drastically alter functioning systems located near water bodies.

"We're not forcing people to replace a whole new system if it's not polluting," Healey said.

However, Clarke maintained that any septic systems pollute to some degree.

"All septic systems pollute, even if they are working," he stated, adding that pathogens, nitrogen and viruses can pass from septic systems into the groundwater which can ultimately affect public drinking water supplies.

As many as 400,000, or two-thirds, of the state's septic systems may be failing, according to some estimates.

Clarke said that some $200 billion is spent each year in the U.S. to clean up polluted drinking and marine water.

He said that septic systems are no different than new roofs and other items which homeowners must pay for.

In addition to the 20 regulatory changes, the administration also proposes three changes which must be approved by the Legislature: a state income tax credit of up to $2,500 for homeowners making repairs under Title V; creation of a statewide code for septic systems, which communities could not exceed; and provide for $30 more million in low interest loans to those making repairs required by Title V.

Cadigan, the Hingham resident, said her cesspool has failed and cannot be replaced since cesspools remain illegal, even with the revisions.

Stating that she cannot afford an expensive new system, Cadigan said the Hingham Board of Health plans to start proceedings to condemn her property, and force her from her home in four weeks.

She said that since she is unable to sell her house, the state's bureaucratic mandates have taken her property without payment.

"I'm getting drummed out of my house. It's horrible. I'm a victim of Title V," she said.

McGee called for Title V to be completely rewritten, with each septic system being examined on an individual basis.

The lawyer charged that the situation has created a bonanza for septic tank inspectors and repair firms, at the expense of often elderly homeowners, who usually lack the money to make complicated repairs to bring septic systems which may still work, up to date.

"This thing is being driven by money," he said. "It's been a tremendous assault on senior citizens."

Both he and Cadigan said that the proposed $2,500 state income tax deduction for homeowners forced to fix septic systems is not enough. They point out that some systems can cost $20,000 to repair.

Hedlund said that the $2,500 figure was determined by the average cost of a septic system repair.

Town may sue over okay of landfill report

The state may have goofed in giving the latest Cohasset Heights Landfill filing on its proposed 27.5 acre expansion the green light, selectmen said this week.

They plan to meet with the conservation and health boards in executive session as soon as a mutually agreeable time can be arranged to consider suing the state over the matter.

"I find the state decision to be a complete surprise," Selectman Peter Pratt said. He said the state environmental secretary's prior certificates made certain requirements which were "clearly" not met in the Comprehensive Site Assessment (CSA) which is the latest landfill report filed with the state.

Town officials are concerned that the Route 3A landfill, which is privately owned, may be polluting groundwater and could be a threat to Lily Pond, the town's water supply. They, and many citizens, have commented on the CSA and other environmental reports stating landfill engineers have not fully reported the extent of the leachate plume. Leachate is the under-ground run-off from the landfill.

"I think this town should reserve its right to give notice and take into consideration a potential suit against the Commonwealth on this matter," Pratt said.

The town must notify the state by August 22 if it wants to appeal state Environmental Secretary Trudy Coxe's decision.

Coxe determined last week that the CSA properly complied with the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act (MEPA). The decision allows CHL to move out of the study stage and into the permitting stage of its proposed expansion.

Landfill opponent John McNabb of Stop Any Further Expansion (S.A.F.E.) said that the town must file notice by August 22 "to save its place in line" and than it can consider whether or not to sue later.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby said it appeared the state environmental office had grown tired of the project.

"It's as if they wanted to get it off the table," she said.

CHL has submitted six environmental reports to the state over the past 4-1/2 years.

The Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) must also rule on the CSA. Selectmen will send copies of all town comments submitted to Coxe to the DEP.

Meanwhile McNabb has testified before the state in favor of a moratorium on building any further landfills and mentioned that Cohasset selectmen were in favor of a moratorium, he said.

McNabb said the draft of the Solid Waste Master Plan concludes that there is an overcapacity of landfill space which could adversely affect recycling if more landfills are allowed.

Staszko withdraws appeal of Shaw's permit

Although developer Donald Staszko has withdrawn his appeal of the planning board decision to allow a Shaw's Supermarket at Cushing Plaza, his legal attempts to stop the development may not be over.

Staszko's attorney, Robert Stolzberg, of Charmoy, Stolzberg & Holian, said the appeal was pulled because, "We felt it was advisable. We're not going forward on that case."

Shaw's attorney, Martin Healy, of Rackemann, Sawyer & Brewster, had sought to have the case dismissed on technical grounds, because it was not filed on time.

But the appeal was withdrawn before a judge ruled on the matter.

Stolzberg added that, "There are ongoing procedures in the administrative agencies," a reference to Shaw's request to modify the comprehensive permit granted by the zoning board of appeals earlier this year. Last week the ZBA agreed to consider the issue. (See related story.)

When asked if that means Staszko is planning to fight Shaw's on other legal grounds, Stolzberg replied, "I didn't say that."

However, a court stenographer was on hand to transcribe the ZBA discussion last week. Staszko had also arranged for court stenographers to record Shaw's appearances before the planning board and conservation commission.

The new Shaw's would compete with the Stop & Shop Supermarket at nearby Cohasset Plaza, which Staszko owns.

Staszko went to Norfolk Superior Court on the grounds that the new shopping center would increase traffic on Rte. 3A and therefore hurt business at South Shore Chevy Geo, an auto dealership he owns 800 feet south of the proposed Shaw's site.

The complaint charged that Shaw's would reduce the value of the auto dealership and "make it more difficult for customers to come to said property and will discourage them from coming."

Planning board chairman Alfred S. Moore, Jr. scoffed at the allegation.

"It's interesting that an auto dealership appeals because of a potential increase in traffic. How many auto dealerships are there on poorly traveled roads?" he wondered.

A conservation commission permit allowing Shaw's to proceed has not been appealed and has therefore gone into effect.

In addition to the Shaw's request under review by the ZBA, the supermarket had been scheduled to appear again before the board of health Wednesday, as the Mariner went to press.

A neighbor of the proposed site, Joseph Hamilton, has appealed the original ZBA decision. However, Healy said last week that he hopes an agreement with Hamilton can be reached.

ZBA to ponder changes proposed by Shaw's

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

The Zoning Board of Appeals last week agreed to reconsider several items in the comprehensive permit it issued for the Shaw's Supermarket planned at Cushing Plaza.

While most of the changes will likely be approved, a request to relax the restriction on fast food restaurants at the plaza provoked considerable discussion during the 90-minute meeting.

Martin Healy, attorney for the supermarket chain, explained that if Bergson Ice Cream should ever leave, Shaw's wanted flexibility to locate another restaurant, which may serve take-out food, in that building.

However, Myrna Putziger, ZBA chairman, said that the comprehensive permit allowed Shaw's to build a larger project than is allowed under zoning.

Therefore, uses which produce heavy traffic, in particular fast food restaurants, are restricted.

The Bergson building is the only place where a restaurant can be located and takeout food must not be the primaty business of the establishment.

Currently, the Bergson takeout window is only open in the summer and serves ice cream, making fast food a limited part of its operations, committee members said.

There appeared to be more consensus over the other changes in the project.

The ZBA permit, which was issued early this year, does not conform to a number of items which have since been added to the plan during discussion with the planning board and conservation commission.

Healy said that the intensive discussions with those committees, and with the design review board, have considerably improved the proposed new plaza.

"The project has been continually improved throughout the process," he said.

ZBA members did not raise objections to the six changes which Healy wants them to accept.

The changes are:

• permission for vehicles to left hand turns, toward Hingham, when exiting onto Rte. 3A, just south of Beechwood St. If the Massachusetts Highway Department does not allow a traffic light at the spot, a police detail will be used during peak periods. The original ZBA decision only permitted right hand turns, toward Scituate. Traffic consultants and the planning board feared that restriction would be confusing, hard to enforce and ultimately counter productive to smooth traffic flow.

• a series of retention ponds substantially behind and to the south of the Bergson's building designed to accommodate water runoff from the parking lot.

• parking removed from behind the southern most proposed building, known as Retail C and located above one of the leaching fields to the closer to the supermarket building. The conservation commission requested the change on the grounds that the area would already be disturbed because of leaching field construction. They wanted the wild area behind Retail C left as natural as possible.

• additional plantings along the Beechwood St. side of the shopping center, added at the request of the planning board and residents. In addition, the large oak tree at the corner of Beechwood St. and Rte. 3A will be retained.

• the green space currently in front of the Bergson building will be kept, at the request of the planning board. The parking that had been slated to go in that spot have been relocated.

• a sidewalk planned to run along Beechwood St. and the supermarket has been scrapped as unnecessary. It will also allow space for more plantings to screen the plaza. A sidewalk will be installed on the north side of Beechwood St. as scheduled.

In addition, after a complicated, technical discussion, ZBA members agreed to consider some wording changes in the noise regulations, which were outlined in the comprehensive permit.

Daytripping

by Laura Ricketson Doherty

Any experienced daytripper knows that there are two approaches to their avocation. One is running around marathon-like in order to see everything possible. I used to be like that.

Now, I take the more leisurely stance. I have learned to choose beforehand what I want and to focus on that with, of course, room to stray off the chosen course if something interesting just happens to draw me away.

Such was my plan when I visited Sandwich. The oldest town on Cape Cod, this tranquil, graceful town draws people from all over the world.

Ms. Jenny Lesperance, resident for just under 20 years, absolutely gloated about her adopted homeland. Lesperance works at the information booth.

"I like the tempo best," she explained. "It's not hectic and we have everything we need here."

She proudly referred me to her guest book which had been signed by visitors from across the globe.

She recommended I visit the Overlook House, a Victorian designer showcase. Perched high on a hill, this rambling delight was built in 1873. Costumed guides greet visitors as they stroll the formally landscaped grounds. There's a romantic gazebo and an observation tower attached to the carriage house and a barn.

Ten interior decorators have designed the rooms to look as they may have in Victorian times, but the look is light and airy — not the heavy, dark look that I have come to associate with that period.

Open daily through Sept. 15, the hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The $5 charge benefits the Thornton Burgess Society. For further information call (508) 888-7479.

The Sandwich Boardwalk is another attraction. When the original blew away in the hurricane of 1993, townspeople raised the $80,000 to replace it. Each donor's name has been inscribed on its planks. It's fun to read them on the short walk over to the public beach. The boardwalk is located at the end of Jarvis and Harbor Streets, north of the railroad station, where trains still stop during their scenic ride along the canal.

A walking tour of the village center is made much easier by the map and guide provided at the tourist booth. At this point, you may want to stop for lunch at the Dunbar House Tea Shop, where the British flavor is provided by its English proprietors, the Bell family.

A delectable selection of home-baked savories and desserts is offered with various teas and cold drinks. Afternoon teas are served all year; high teas on winter Sundays. The gift shop offers British gourmet foods, books, antiques and collectibles.

Across the street on Shawnee Pond is the working Dexter Grist Mill, built in 1654 and restored in 1960. This is where early settlers first brought their corn to be ground.

Helpful guides explain the workings of the old mill so well that even I, known for my mechanical inability, understood — at least most of it. It was cool and pleasant standing on the small bridge watching the water squeeze through the gates, strike the paddle and turn the wheel.

The historical information they provided was fascinating. For instance, I discovered one reason our illustrious forefathers had such poor teeth. The earlier millstones were granite, which during the grinding process left particles of granite (pumice) in the cornmeal. Since early settlers ate this as much as twice a day, many of them ended up with no teeth.

Fresh cornmeal (without pumice) is available. During the summer the mill is open daily from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Saturday; Sunday, 1 to 5 p.m. Admission is $1.50.

For all fans of that great naturalist and children's author, Thornton Burgess, a trip to the museum by that name is a must.

A short walk from the mill, the museum is in what used to be Burgess' aunt's home. Born in Sandwich, Burgess' love of nature provided a foundation for his animal stories. A lifetime of memorabilia is displayed, including a letter Burgess wrote to his mother at the age of 12, complete with misspellings and corrections.

Many of the original publications are included with my favorite, "Peter Rabbit," both in regular and miniature size.

The original typed manuscript of his poem, "Gully Lane," draws many a respectful viewer. And the words are just as poignant today.

A separate room is provided for children, where they can draw their favorite characters and display them on the racks provided. There's also a dress-up center to try on costumes. And a mirror to see how they would look as a Burgess animal.

Hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Saturday; 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday. A donation of $1 is suggested.

The Green Briar Nature Center and Jam Kitchen is well worth the visit for anyone with an interest in jelly-making or even just the results. Also affiliated with the Burgess Society, it is less than a five-minute drive after turning right on Route 6A from the town center.

"To Ida," he wrote:

"It's a wonderful thing to sweeten the world which is in a jam and needs preserving."

Natural history exhibits, tours of the attractive blue and white kitchen, all original, a resource library and gift shop are offered. Jelly- and jam-making are daily events. There is a great deal of interest in an invention of Putnam's, the suncooker, where preserves are cooked by the sun in a greenhouse-like structure rather than on a stove.

Across from the kitchen is the Briar Patch. My walk through it began appropriately with a quick stop to sample some of the enormous blackberries along the way. There are many helpful signs posted with valuable information. I particularly appreciated the one explaining lichens as two organisms — algae and fungi — who took a liking to each other. There are also wildflower and herb gardens. Hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Saturday; Sunday, 1 to 4 p.m. A donation is suggested.

Just minutes on down Route 6A is the Cranberry Craft Shop. One of the oldest on the Cape, it was once a variety store, then a post office. A variety of cranberry glass, cobalt glass and antiques are offered in this rambling red landmark.

If by now you're ready for dinner, you may want to retrace your way to the center of town, to the Daniel Webster Inn, reconstructed on the site of a tavern where Webster kept rooms when he came to the area to hunt and fish. Luckily the powdered wigs and frocks required after 5 p.m. are no longer necessary.

There are several rooms to choose from, including the Webster Room, decorated with Williamsburg reproductions, and the glass conservatory. Chicken pie is a traditional favorite.

Other points on interest are Yesterday's Doll Museum, which contains two floors of dolls, houses and toys. Also in town is the famous Sandwich Glass Museum, which displays some of the finest glass work produced in this country during the 19th century.

A short distance out of town is the Heritage Plantation, which really is a daytrip in itself.

To reach Sandwich, cross the Sagamore Bridge, take Route 6 and Exit 2.

Drama workshops held

A group of Cohasset High School students has been spending every Wednesday evening since the beginning of school vacation with drama director Ron Emmons to develop their own script for the season's first Drama Workshop production.

The students are attempting to draw from the experiences of their peers both in Cohasset and in other towns to present them fictionally, but realistically, through monologues and short scenes, which will be blended with music to present an accurate impression of the contemporary adolescent experience.

Cohasset students who have participated in the project, which will run through the summer, are: Alex Creighton, Eric Henry, Jessica Hurley, Connor Mangan, Faye Menis, Ron Nicynski, Meredith O'Hayre, Meghan O'Sullivan, Alli Ritts, Laura Slotnick and Kelly Tufts. Students interested in joining the group should call Ritts, O'Hayre, Sullivan or Tufts. Students taking part in the project are not required to perform on stage.

The script, the result of the summer's efforts, will be performed at Cohasset High School on Oct. 27 and 28. The final script will be sent to various publishers.

Chief Lincoln reports on fire department activities

In his May and June reports to selectmen, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said training for civilian dispatchers who man the town's enhanced 9-1-1 system was progressing.

"Dispatchers were instructed by the on-duty firefighters in all functions of fire department dispatching and response procedures," Lincoln said.

"Subjects covered were use of telephones; answering and calling, receiving and transmitting alarms of fire, proper two-way radio procedure, the call-back system and record keeping.

"All dispatchers received a handbook detailing fire department procedures," he explained.

He said training of EMTs in the use of the Epi-Pen (Epinephrine Auto-Injector) for emergency treatment of severed allergic reactions to insect stings and bites, foods, drugs and other allergens was conducted.

"On May 11th, an oil spill was discovered near Mealy's Pond on Beechwood Street," Lincoln reported. "Since it was raining, the spill ran into the street drainage system. With the help of the Highway Department with sand, and the Police Department with traffic control, the surrounding wetlands were protected," he said.

Lincoln said "the guilty party" has not been identified and the fire department was unable to recoup the cost of materials used such as booms, pads and absorbent.

He said in June, Air Cleaning Specialists of Hanover started installing the exhaust removal system in the Fire/Police headquarters building. When the system is complete, the health hazard of dangerous exhaust fumes will be greatly reduced, Lincoln said.

Over the two-month period, firefighters fought two structure fires and 10 outdoor fires and responded to four motor vehicle accidents and one motor vehicle fire. The department responded to 91 medical calls, two brush fires, and conducted 21 investigations and 106 inspections.

New England swimming champ focuses on upcoming season

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

Greg Bilton could hardly play the part of a night owl during the three months leading up to the New England Age Group Swimming and Diving Championships.

The 14-year-old Bilton, who will enter his sophomore year at Cohasset Junior/Senior High School in just a few weeks, was in the sharpening phase of his preparation of the meet as a member of the Massachusetts Bay Marlins. Bilton was up at 4 a.m., for his 1-1/2 hour early-morning workout at Harvard's Blodgett Pool and back for another 2-1/2 hours in the evening.

Bilton admits dragging himself out of bed at that ungodly hour was tough at first, but he became used to it by the time the end of the school year rolled around and he had more time to rest.

"At the beginning it was hard," said Bilton, "but I got used to it. I was usually in bed a little before 10 p.m., depending on how much homework I had.

"During school it's really hard. Just looking forward to the end of the season and the championships make it a lot of fun."

The training Bilton put in obviously did the trick. The New England champion as a 12 year old, Bilton was nothing short of spectacular, two weeks ago, when over the course of four days he was victorious in the 50-meter freestyle, 100 freestyle, 200 freestyle, 100 breaststroke, 100 butterfly and 200 individual medley in the 14-and-under age group.

The six victories served as a barometer for Bilton and helped put the sport in a new perspective for him as to how he could do against athletes in his own age division. Just seven days earlier Bilton competed in an open competition and was somewhat disheartened when the results came in.

"The previous week (in the New England Senior championships) I competed against swimmers of all ages," Bilton explained. "You tend to get discouraged because the swimmers are older than you and have more experience. There's a lot of satisfaction swimming with people in your own age group."

Bilton is currently in the "resting" phase of his training. The team is allowed two full weeks of rest. Over the next two weeks members have the option of light swimming or more rest if they feel they really need it. By the beginning of September it's back to the pool for official training sessions.

Bilton cuts back during the very short offseason, but keeps his fitness level up by running every day. "That's when we have a break," he said. "I don't want to get out of shape."

Bilton got his start in the pool as an 8-year-old member of the Cohasset Swim Team. He swam for the South Shore YWCA when he turned 11 and a year later joined the Marlins. Bilton has been

A sweaty night of field hockey and respect

By Joe Reardon

The challenge was there for the taking. Marshfield High field hockey captains Sue Joyal and Lisa Tingley were more than willing to meet Dave McKee and myself on the fields of Hingham High to show us just what it took to play the game the way it was meant to be played. I learned very quickly that the sport is a demanding one; a combination of heart, lungs, skill and conditioning, lots of conditioning, working together as a machine in cleats.

Of course, I stepped in it big time in the "Extra Points" column when I wrote a tongue-and-cheek piece poking fun at field hockey. Although the pair were intelligent enough to realize the column was done in the vein of humor, neither Joyal nor Tingley were amused by the imaginary story I wanted to write this summer but wouldn't have the time: "Sleeping In: A Week at Field Hockey Camp."

I dug the hole and it was time to climb out of it. And since Dave's mug shot is alongside mine at the top of the column, he was going to join me in a small adventure into uncharted waters. Make that a grassy field.

In my own defense, let me say straight out that I never questioned field hockey players as athletes. I've written in the past that there just seemed to be so many rules. The referees, I believed, were whistle happy and it interfered with the flow of the game and what the players could really do. That was my beef.

But, alas, it was time to put up or shut

The Boston Bruins did South Shore hockey fans a huge favor by acquiring Pembroke's Kevin Stevens in a trade last week with the Pittsburgh Penguins.

Hockey has been big in this area since the days of the Big, Bad Bruins with Bobby Orr in the early 70s. However, the Bruins lack of playoff success in recent years and the arrival of quarterback Drew Bledsoe, has pushed hockey to the sports back burner.

But all that changed last Wednesday as the Bruins worked out a deal for Stevens, a two-time Stanley Cup winner and two-time 50 goal scorer.

Now everyone is talking hockey and with good reason.

Stevens, 30, is considered one of the premier power forwards in the NHL and his arrival has moved the Bruins into serious Stanley Cup contention.

And while everyone knows what Stevens has done at the pro level, his rise to hockey superstardom began humbly.

Born in Brockton, Stevens and his family moved to Pembroke where Kevin began to dominate all sports from an early age.

But his play in youth hockey leagues at the Hobomock Rink in Pembroke, the Pilgrim Arena in Hingham and the Rockland Arena, quickly showed that the rangy Stevens had the potential to become a very good hockey player.

When it was time for high school, Stevens chose to stay home and play at Silver Lake Regional High instead of attending a more prestigious private school. Apparently, he wanted to become a part of the Silver Lake hockey tradition he grew up watching as a youngster with his friends.

At Silver Lake Stevens quickly showed his athletic talents in football (starting quarterback,) hockey (first-line left wing) and baseball (starting catcher.)

He graduated as one of the school's best all-around athletes in '83. But it was his hockey abilities that drew the most attention as he was drafted by the Los Angeles Kings in the later rounds of the NHL amateur draft. He was also offered a full scholarship to Boston College.

However, Stevens was not blinded by the bright lights of the pros at that young age. He knew he needed to develop his skating in order to really play in the NHL one day. (There was talk that the Kings drafted Stevens with the idea of making him a fighting goon and at 6'3", 230-pounds, he could have easily fit the bill.)

Stevens chose to attend Boston College where he played with future NHL players like Craig Janney and Brian Leetch for four years. While at BC, the Kings traded his NHL rights to the Penguins.

After graduating from BC in '87, Stevens made the '88 U.S. Olympic hockey team. After the Olympics (there was no repeat of the '80 gold medal magic) Stevens was called up to the Penguins.

He was sent down to the minors for with the club ever since.

Bilton is now at the team's highest level and is looking to qualify for a national meet by the end of the short-course portion of the season in April.

His training consists of over-distance work early in the season with the focus on building his aerobic capacity. Out of the pool, the Marlins do gut-wrenching interval runs up and down the steep stairs of Harvard's football stadium. Bilton doesn't lift weights, but gains upper-body strength working out using a medicine ball.

"That's what really builds your strength," he said.

With the demanding training, Bilton is always tired during the year. But as he begins to taper for the championship races and doing anaerobic workouts in the pool, Bilton can feel just how strong the longer swims have made him.

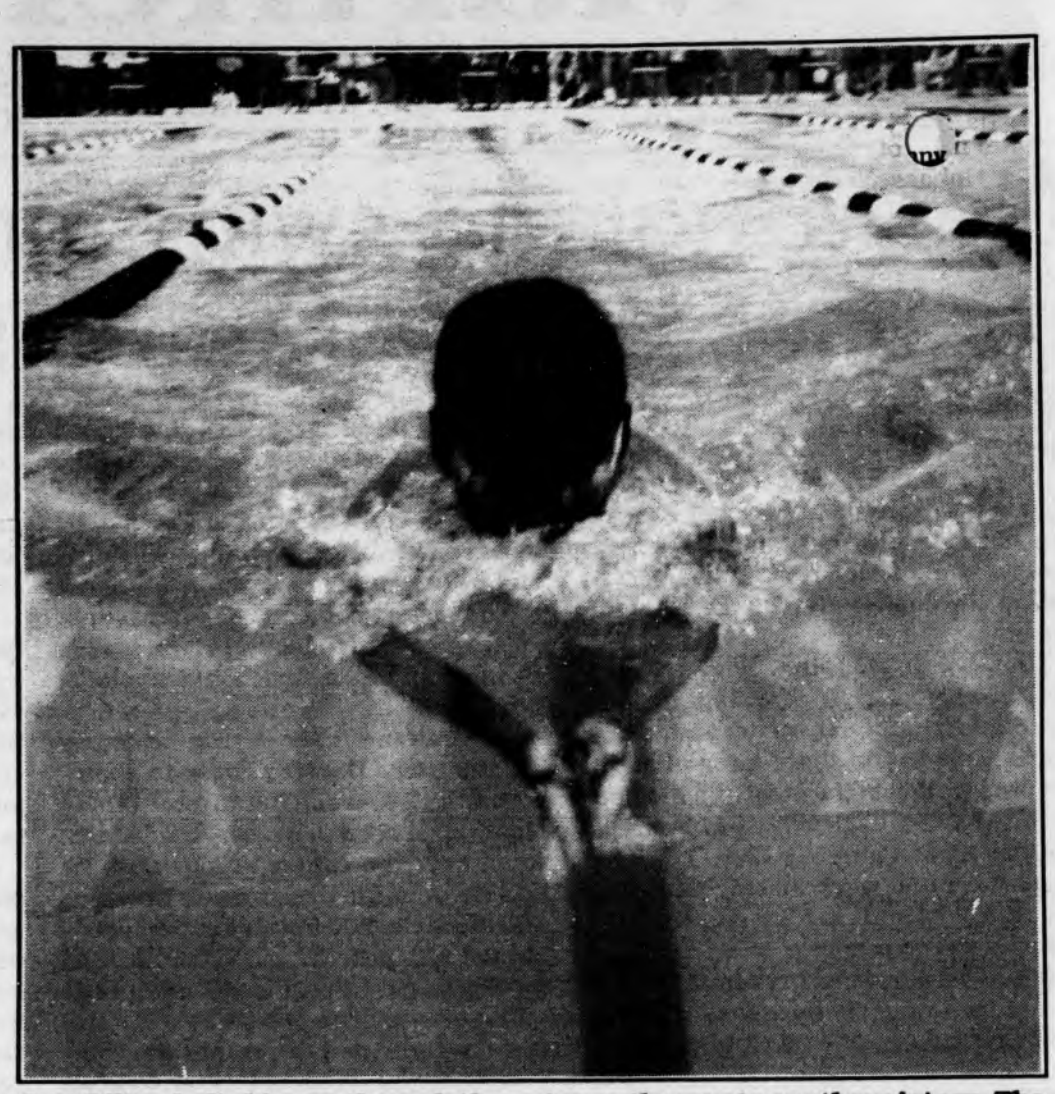
Bilton likes the individuality of swimming and having to depend on his own abilities rather than the combined efforts of a team.

"I've just developed into swimming," he said. "It's an individual sport and the only one you can blame when you do bad is yourself. When you do well, the only one you can reward is yourself."

However, Bilton enjoys the interaction with his teammates and the swimmers he recognizes at meets. In the five or six competitions he enters a year, Bilton sees many of the same faces in the up to 30 races he swims in over the course of a season and has developed a number of friendships through the sport.

"It's very close-knit," Bilton said. "You know everyone works as hard as you do."

Bilton is eventually hoping to land a scholarship to college through his swimming and continue the sport at the collegiate level. He's not involved in any other activities in school, but when you put in the time and effort Bilton does in the pool, how much is really left to spread around?



Greg Bilton bulls his way through the water on the way to another victory. The 14-year-old Cohasset Junior/Senior High student won six events in the New England Swimming and Diving Age Group Championships.

up. Explanations, I knew, would fall on deaf ears. This was a legitimate challenge. Not to honor it would give the impression, and rightfully so, that I was hiding being my computer, afraid to come out from behind it and be held accountable for what I write week after week. Sounds good anyway.

So I called Sue and accepted the challenge. I had just one request. I wanted to wait a week until we played. Although he wasn't the one "dissin" field hockey, Dave too was challenged. But at the time he was enjoying vacation and I didn't want to pull him off the couch, turn off "Kojak" and inform him of the crisis at hand. Besides, I knew Dave wouldn't have missed a chance to strut his stuff on an open field in 90-degree heat for anything. Far be it from me to spend an early-evening gasping for breath without sharing it with my partner. What kind of colleague would I be?

There were other concerns as well. Sue told me she would have sticks for both of us. Great, I thought. Going on the field with a field hockey stick was about fourth on the list of worries I had. Dropping dead of heat stroke was a distant second. Visions of a field hockey ball that doubled as a heat-seeking missle ran through my head. The idea of a direct hit was enough to make me wince out loud. I went out and made the purchase. My biggest worry was gone. The worst that could happen now was making a fool of myself against a group of high school girls whose intentions were still a mystery to me.

I arrived at the field, having decided it was too hot for a "Rob Roy" kilt. Dave was already there. He was swinging the stick the same way someone would if he was teeing off at the U.S. Open. Dave's a big golf fan but this wasn't the time or place.

We chatted with the girls for a few minutes. Marshfield was to play Hingham's squad. It was decided Dave would play for Marshfield and I'd cross over and join the Hingham team.

I was positioned and left forward, but wound up all over the field, fruitlessly chasing the elusive ball wherever it went. Keep in mind this was the third game of the evening for the girls and they weren't breathing as hard as I do when I'm asleep.

My biggest battle was oxygen debt. We had several breaks down the field and I would run hard to get into position, enjoying the exhilaration of playing a team sport for the first time in so many years. Unfortunately, offense is only part of the field hockey experience. Running back to join my teammates on defense took its toll. I was exhausted and sweating bullets.

The first time I came within five feet of the ball I lost my footing and wound up on the grass. As I pulled myself up, with the help of my stick, which I used more as a cane as the game dragged on, my teammates were putting together an attack.

Dave was doing better than myself, but I had the feeling he was rubbing the referee the wrong way. After kicking the ball accidentally, a no-no in field hockey, Dave tried to explain to the ref he wears size 12 Chuck Taylors and an accidental kick here and there was inevitable. She didn't buy it. Big surprise.

The longer I played the more I began to appreciate the skill involved. You can only hit the ball with the flat end of the stick. There are no back-hand shots. Instead, you have to turn the stick around to feed the ball off to a teammate. I had trouble enough trying to get that move down before the game when there was no one attempting to steal the ball from me. Once the game started, forget it. The girls had no problem with the move as they continued to make the sport look easier to play than it really was.

Ironically, Dave scored the only goal of the game as he took a pretty pass from a teammate and drilled a shot past the netminder.

The final score was 1-0. That hardly mattered, though. I had a new appreciation of sport I could never understand. Sue and Lisa gave Dave and myself field hockey T-shirts following the game. We talked a little and it was time to head home. It's funny, but for some reason there don't seem to be as many whistles when you're out on the field playing. Now, when I go to a game and the whistle is blown, I'll have a better idea why.

I had one chilling thought before I left the field. I was glad I wasn't offered a challenge by those who took offense to another story I won't be able to get to this summer: "Speedos and the men who wear them." Yikes!

one stretch that first season before finally sticking in the line-up for good in '89.

From '90 to the present, Stevens has been the dominant left wing in the NHL as his strong skating, hard shot and physical presence helped the Penguins go from laughing stock to two-time Stanley Cup champs.

Now, he has a chance to come back home and play for the team he cheered for as a youngster.

It looks to be an excellent fit.

Peter McNeeley, the pride and joy of the South Shore Boxing Club in Whitman, will have his 15 minutes of fame on Aug. 19 when he squares off with "Iron" Mike Tyson in the former heavyweight champ's return to the boxing ring after three years in prison.

However, after watching the video of a lean and mean Tyson working out last week, McNeeley's fame may last only 15 seconds.

This fight is shaping up to be the biggest mismatch since General George Armstrong Custer tried to take on several thousand Indians with one cavalry division at the Little Bighorn River.

McNeeley is a great story as the hard-punching son of a former heavyweight contender, but he is in way over his head with Tyson.

When asked how long the battle with Custer lasted at the Little Bighorn, an Indian reportedly replied: "As long as it takes a hungry man to eat a meal."

Well, Tyson is a VERY hungry man after being locked up in prison for three long years. And according to boxing sources, Tyson has abandoned his free-wheeling fighting style for a more defensive, two-fisted approach.

This means trouble for our local hero and former South Look coverboy.

McNeeley is a great puncher (I've seen him fight twice in person and he attacks every opponent with both hands right from the opening bell.) But he doesn't have the greatest foot speed and his defensive skills are lacking.

His only hope is to catch Tyson with one of his haymakers in the first round and hope Tyson will fall like he did against James "Buster" Douglas.

But Tyson will surely sidestep McNeeley's bombs and launch a few left hooks and right uppercuts of his own.

And while it is not known if McNeeley can take a punch, he picked the wrong guy to test his chin.

McNeeley and his handlers believe Peter will win. (Optimism always runs high in boxing circles.) I'm more concerned that McNeeley doesn't get killed.

In the last few months, one boxer has died in the ring while another was hit so hard in the head, he is now blind and paralyzed.

And for all his troubles with Tyson, McNeeley is slated to receive $700,000.

But Uncle Sam will get a pretty good chunk of that. McNeeley's manager Vin Vecchione is also slated for a piece of the pie. And Don King has yet to meet a fighter he couldn't fleece.

Therefore, McNeeley will be lucky to clear $250,000 after all is said and done.

That may sound like a nice lump of change but it is peanuts compared to someone's health.

Here's hoping McNeeley wakes up on Aug. 20 with all his faculties intact and lives to fight another day.

Sir Ian MacGregor

Resident is honored

Sir Ian MacGregor, a summer resident in Cohasset, is among eight legendary leaders of the American mining industry who will be enshrined in the National Mining Hall of Fame in Leadville, Colorado, in September.

Three of the leaders are still living, and include MacGregor, who helped make AMAX Inc. into one of the largest integrated mining companies in the United States, Dr. Frederick A. Hauck, 101, of Cincinnati, a nuclear scientist and silver miner, and Dr. Thomas V. Falkie, chairman of the National Mining Hall of Fame's board of governors.

The 1995 inductees will join 118 other mining "greats" honored at previous banquets at the Hall of Fame's eight annual induction banquet in Denver Sept. 24.

MacGregor, a native of Scotland who became an American citizen, held various industrial positions, in time becoming vice president and later, chairman of AMAX, a position he held until his retirement in 1977. In the 10-year period from 1966-1976, the company's sales went from $570 million to more than $1 billion. He also gained public recognition for the company's environmental actions.

After retiring, he staked out new leadership roles in the United Kingdom, first heading the state-owned steel industry and then the state-owned coal industry.

MacGregor is currently a partner in McFarland Dewey & Co. in New York City and was elected to the Fortune magazine National Business Hall of Fame in 1979. In 1986 he was knighted by Queen Elizabeth II.

MacGregor has received numerous awards in the mining field and resides in Florida with his wife. He has two children and five grandchildren.

Gems with a past come to Cohasset this week

By James Loewenstein
Mariner correspondent

As a boy growing up in Cohasset, Malcolm Logan was in the Little League and played on a baseball diamond.

These days, diamonds still have an important role in Logan's life.

"We travel all over the world, buying and selling the most beautiful jewelry ever made," said Logan, who runs a jewelry business with a friend in Portland, Maine, called Nelson Rarities, Inc.

On Aug. 10-12, Logan will be at Cohasset Jewelers Tedeschi Plaza off Route 3A, where he will sell items from Nelson Rarities' collection, including earrings that had belonged to Dinah Shore, a ring that actor Charles Laughton had given to movie star Margaret O'Brien, and jewelry from the estate of Myrna Loy, "who was considered the most elegant movie star of the 1930s and 1940s," Logan said.

Nelson Rarities, which is run by Logan, 40, and fellow Harvard graduate Andrew Nelson, "is an international jewelry firm that buys and sells antique and estate jewelry from Zurich to Hong Kong," he said.

The two originally teamed up to make jewelry deals when they were students together at Harvard University in the 1970s, he said.

That's where Logan began dabbling in buying and selling jewelry, he said. At the time, Jimmy Carter was president and there was significant inflation, so people put their money into jewelry, causing jewelry prices to soar, he said.

"It was very easy to make money" by buying jewelry and then selling it when its value had shot up, he said.

In 1981, jewelry prices dropped, "but by that time, I had developed a love for the jewelry business," he said.

"I like the beauty of (jewelry pieces)," he said, "and the fact that they have a history to them."

Soon after Logan graduated from Harvard in 1978, Nelson asked him to join his company, Nelson Rarities, Logan said.

Logan said he'll bring "quite rare and unusual jewelry" to Cohasset Jewelers, including an 80-carat star sapphire pendant which had belonged to M[illegible]Loy and a Victorian ring she h[illegible]d depicting a cherub riding a c[illegible]

Loy had starred with William [illegible] in the "Thin Man" series, in which they played detectives, he said. At the time, they were considered the most elegant couple in the movies, he said.

There will be "over $1 million in antique, period and estate jewelry" at the sale, said Mark Cirone, owner of Cohasset Jewelers. Estate jewelry is jewelry that has been used before.

The sale will also include Art Deco jewelry by Cartier and Van Cleef & Arpels, a diamond tiara from the Edwardian era, sterling silver jewelry by George Jensen, Victorian-era lockets, and a necklace and ring by famous Greek jeweler Lalalounis, Logan said.

Also on sale will be earrings that had been owned by the wife of Jan Pierce, who was a famous tenor in "Fiddler on the Roof," Logan said.

In addition, there will be a collection of early memorial pieces, which were made to commemorate a loved one's life, including a very rare 17th century locket, he said.

Logan said he and Nelson are successful because "we have a good sense of what is pretty and what isn't. We try and only buy the best," he said. Because they travel a lot, they come in contact with the finest jewelry, he said.

Logan is the son of Cohasset resident Polly Logan, who is vice chair of the state Republican Party.

He has taught an annual antique jewelry seminar at the University of Maine.

Whoever heard of a delicious Landmark?

Deveney siblings bring play to Cohasset stage

By James Loewenstein
Mariner correspondent

For five years in a row, Elizabeth Deveney has produced and directed summer theater sponsored by the Cohasset Recreation Department.

And she is only 19 years old.

Deveney, who was the primary force behind "Beauty and the Beast," which was performed Tuesday and Wednesday in the Cohasset Town Hall auditorium, says her 17- and 22-year-old sisters have also helped out. (See page 4)

'Big Dig' connection

Conservation group may sue if Greenbush is stopped

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner staff

Like area commuters waiting to hear which of two transportation options will be chosen for the Greenbush corridor — the Conservation Law Foundation (CLF) has a vested interest in this transit project.

The Greenbush Line and indeed the entire Old Colony Railroad restoration project is mitigation for Boston's Central Artery project, said Veronika Thiebach, a staff attorney for CLF.

Founded in 1966, this membership-based, non-profit environmental law organization works to protect public health and natural resources in New England.

Under the federal Clean Air Act, CLF filed suit in August 1991 against the state over the "big dig" which is destined to put more cars on the already congested roadways around Boston and more pollution in the air.

In an agreement with the state, CLF agreed to allow work on the dig to continue as long as several mitigation terms including restoration of all three lines of the Old Colony Railroad were met. If rail restoration for Greenbush is not completed, the MBTA and the state would have to come up with a substitute transit option to avoid another CLF lawsuit in federal court, said MBTA Manager of Environmental Affairs Andrew Brennan.

The time for debate over alternatives to this project has passed without the identification of a substitute that would yield equivalent benefits to commuter rail service..'

— Conservation Law Foundation Deputy Director Alan Wilson in a letter to state Transportation Secretary James Kerasiotes.

And if that suit was filed in 1997 or 1998, when "big dig" work is expected to be in full swing, the city could come to a standstill, he said.

Thiebach acknowledged that the transit regulations do include a substitution clause but this provision could only be used if Greenbush commuter rail is found to be "infeasible" and the substitute transportation alternative "would achieve equal or greater emission reduction."

Brennan has maintained that the Old Colony project alone would more than

Officials to ponder policy on using police details

By Charlene Vandini
Mariner staff

Some people see a police officer standing over an open manhole as a public employee being paid too much to do an easy job.

Others see a police officer standing under a "cherrypicker" as protecting public safety and providing a greater police presence in the community.

Following last week's decision by state Attorney General Scott Harshbarger, other towns may begin to grapple with these opposing views of police details versus civilian "flaggers" at road construction sites. The attorney general approved recently adopted by-laws in three Massachusetts towns that essentially lets each town decide for itself.

The issue in Cohasset takes on an additional twist, as the town faces major public works projects for sewers and water mains.

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said he would like the selectmen to clarify the matter of flaggers. He is considering a town warrant article similar to one that passed the Plainville, Mass. town meeting in June, that vests authority for police details or civilian flaggers with the police chief.

Selectman Peter Pratt said that the selectmen have required contractors to consult with the police chief about police details, but the by-laws are silent on the subject of flaggers.

The other two by-laws approved by Harshbarger include one from the town of Halifax, which approved a by-law change on May 8, that allows civilian

Cohasset's week

Blame was misdirected

Cohasset Plaza owner Donald Staszko was not responsible for an apparent water ban violation at the plaza, which was discussed at the August 3 water commissioners' meeting and reported in the August 10 Mariner.

The paper regrets any confusion over the issue.

Michael J. Glynne, general manager of Hingham-based C. Spirito, Inc. — the company which repaired the septic system at Stop & Shop — notified Cohasset water commissioners Aug. 14 that it "accepted full responsibility for this incident and wishes to convey our sincere apologies to the Board of Water Commissioners and the Town of Cohasset for this violation."

Water commissioners said at their Aug. 3 meeting they would send a warning letter in connection with an incident involving an open hydrant feeding water to about 100 feet of hose that was being used to water trees at Cohasset Plaza. The water department was alerted to the incident by a Stop & Shop patron, commissioners said.

In a telephone interview Wednesday, operations manager Richard Cohan said Mr. Staszko's name was mentioned at the August 3 meeting in connection with the violation. However, he said the water department held off sending the letter until the issue could be clarified and in the interim the water department received the letter from Spirito.

Under the water ban, outside watering is only permissible between the hours of 10 p.m. and 6 a.m.

"I trust this letter will help you redirect the blame for this unfortunate occurrence and reinstate our client, Mr. Donald Staszko's good standing with your board," Glynne wrote.

Air testing results due

In about two weeks, board of health members expect to receive results from air tests conducted Aug. 8 at town hall.

Health agent Joseph Godzik told the board that windows throughout town hall were kept closed during the testing.

The tests were conducted because of complaints by health board secretary Carol Oteri-Puffer, who has been on a medical leave of absence for the past two months. The board announced last week that she has requested an additional two months of medical leave.

Shaw's septic plan OK'ed

After a 20-minute discussion last week, the health board unanimously approved plans for a second septic system at the new shopping center proposed for Cushing Plaza.

The site will be developed by Shaw's Supermarkets, whose representatives explained last week that the septic system will be larger than required by under Cohasset rules.

The second system will serve the Bergson Ice Cream building and a third site, to house a dentist and a bank, known as Retail C. The first septic system, already approved, will serve the supermarket building.

New duties are adopted

During a friendly discussion with the board of health Aug. 9 Arthur L. Lehr, Jr., chairman of the recycling committee, outlined the group's progress and goals.

The committee has tentatively adopted a logo, a pheasant, portrayed in brown, green and mauve, dashing through fallen leaves.

In addition, Lehr said the committee has rewritten its responsibilities to include:

- keep the board of health informed of all actions, program changes in vendors, location of bins, new recyclables, etc.
- supervise day to day operations of the recycling facility, working with its supervisor, including placement of bins, signs, cleanliness of containers (glass, paper, mulch, etc.), maintenance, housekeeping, making signs, etc.
- track shipments with weight receipts.
- chart material by weight/receipt and moneys received. Make out monthly report for health board.
- check on markets for various products, paper glass, tires, courrugated, plastics, etc.
- make changes in vendor market as warranted.
- encourage personnel to serve townspeople by being friendly, courteous and caring at the recycling facility.

Hedlund holds office hours

Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) will be holding regular local office hours on Friday, Aug. 18, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the downstairs meeting room at Cohasset Town Hall.

Office hours provide an opportunity for constituents to voice their opinions and comments in person, without having to travel to the State House. Appointments may be made by calling Kathleen in the Senator's office at (617) 722-1646. Walk-ins are also encouraged.

Highway projects listed

During the weeks of Aug. 21 and 28, the following Cohasset streets will be resurfaced and storm drains adjusted:

King Street from #326 to Route 3A; King Street from Route 3A to North Main Street; Beechwood Street from Route 3A to Todd Road; Beechwood Street from #380 to #227; Kinden Drive from Jerusalem Road to #70; Pond Street from Route 3A to Spring Street.

Residents should expect some detours and delays when traveling on these roads, according to Harold W. Litchfield, Highway Surveyor, who has apologized for any inconvenience caused by the project.

Deveney siblings bring play to Cohasset stage

"We really had to teach ourselves how to create a successful play," she says. "Each year (the productions) get better and better because we get more and more organized."

Deveney says she began directing at age 12 when she recruited neighborhood kids to put on plays in her garage in Cohasset. They performed "Alice in Wonderland" and "Peter Pan," and "the whole neighborhood came and watched it," she says.

"The plays went really well," she recalls, and at age 14, she approached Jack Worley, Recreation Department director, and Ted Carroll, playground coordinator, and asked if she could produce a town-wide production. It was a way of "expanding what I wanted to do," she says, adding that she wanted to get more kids involved in the productions.

Worley, who agreed to let her produce a play as part of the Department's summer recreation program, says, "Elizabeth did a great job even as a kid."

During the first year, "the playground director had to round up kids because not many kids had signed up" to be in the play, Deveney says, adding that later the kids started to love participating in the productions.

"Every year (the production) gets bigger and bigger," she says.

This year, "Beauty and the Beast" had a cast of 87 children, ages five to 13, she says.

Worley says participation has been increasing mostly because the productions have been successful.

Since the musical was performed on two nights, two sets of children played some of the main parts, Deveney says. The children were "all very important to the show," she adds.

This year, Deveney's 17-year-old sister, Grace, was in charge of light and sound, and another sister, 22-year-old Sara, designed the sets. And their 23-year-old brother, Matt, played keyboards in the show.

"I made them work on the show," Deveney says jokingly, "because I needed to use their talents."

Each child's parents were responsible for making his or her costume, she says.

"They really get into the costume making," says Grace Deveney.

Elizabeth Deveney, who is a voice major at Catholic University in Washington, D.C., also taught the children the songs in "Beauty and the Beast" and was the choreographer.

The musical concerns a young prince who has been transformed into a hideous beast because he refused to give shelter to an old beggar woman on a winter night. As part of the spell, household objects in his castle have been transformed into enchanted creatures, Deveney says.

Ten-year-old Sera Genovese of Howe Road, who played Lefou in "Beauty and the Beast," says, "One of my favorite things to do is be an actress," and adds that she wants to be one when she grows up. This summer's production was the fourth she has acted in under the direction of Elizabeth Deveney.

"Beth and Grace taught me everything," Genovese says.

Caroline Carr, 10, of Jerusalem Road, says that the large cast makes rehearsals "more confusing". But, she says, "It's really fun. I really like to act and sing." Carr played a talking teapot.

Nine-year-old Amanda Taus of Stevens Lane, said the play is "not the funnest (of the summer productions). If you don't have a big part, you're mostly sitting down." Taus had several parts in the musical, including being a dinner plate and a townsperson, she said.

But nine-year-old Nicholas Licare of Scituate, says he likes the larger cast because he is among "a lot of people who love to do drama."

David Ingber, 10, of Woodland Drive, played Gaston and says, "I really like to entertain people."

The set included several cardboard refrigerator boxes, each of which had been painted very realistically to look like a small business, such as a bakery and a book shop.

At a dress rehearsal, the children did some complicated dance steps. Some of the actors spoke in English accents, which were very enjoyable.

"I'm always going to be extensively involved in the theater," Elizabeth Deveney says, "but I don't know in exactly what aspect."

Judge Powers gives former RTF manager 18 months probation

by Charlene Vandini
Mariner staff

Joseph "Skinny" Laugelle, former manager of the Cohasset recycling and transfer facility, pleaded guilty to charges that he molested a Cohasset girl over a four-year period beginning in 1988.

Laugelle, 63, was sentenced to 18 months supervised probation.

Norfolk County Asst. District Attorney David Deakin had asked Judge Warren Powers for a 2-1/2 year sentence, with six months be to served at the House of Correction, and four years' probation.

Two counts of showing obscene material to a minor and a second count of indecent assault and battery on a person over age 14 were dropped, Deakin said.

Laugelle had pleaded not guilty to all charges when he was arraigned at Quincy District Court last year.

In a statement prior to sentencing, Laugelle's accuser, now 17 years old and attending school out of state, said she is scarred by Laugelle's "sick and perverted acts." When she returns to Cohasset and sees him, she is reminded of what happened to her, she said. But, leaving town helped her gain the confidence to bring the charges against him.

She told the court that Laugelle had "robbed her of her childhood" and called him "nothing more than a piece of garbage."

She also said she was further victimized by many hearings and meetings that Laugelle and his attorney rescheduled and postponed, and by rumors that Laugelle's supporters spread about her.

In addition, the young woman said her younger disabled sister was upset by the rumors, which also contributed to their mother's failing health.

However, Laugelle's attorney A. John Pappalardo said the sentence was a reflection of the merits of the case against his client.

"Some would consider the sentence to be unusually light, but it was imposed by a knowledgeable and experienced judge, based on his view of the conduct charged," Pappalardo said.

He added that Laugelle's decision to plead guilty "was prompted in large part by his desire to attend to personal matters and put this behind him."

According to Asst. District Attorney Christa Stanton, the same young woman has also accused John Foster of Hull, a Cohasset school bus driver, of molesting her. Foster, 70, has pleaded not guilty to five counts of indecent assault and battery on a child under 14. His case is scheduled for September 8 at Quincy District Court.

Laugelle notified the Cohasset health department that he would retire, effective August 6. He had been a town employee for more than 30 years, having worked for the police and highway departments, in addition to the recycling center, according to Cohasset Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik. His brother Rocco was a Cohasset selectman and another brother Peter is the town's tree and park superintendent.

Recycling is made simple

Through a donation made by North Shore Recycled Fibers/The Newark Group, residents of Cohasset have recycling information at their fingertips 24 hours a day by dialing a recycling hotline (1-800-800-6881 or (617) RECYCLE.

A grant from NSRF, one of the state's leading recycling companies and a key provider of recycling services to the town, ensures that Cohasset's recycling message will remain part of a non-profit, statewide recycling hotline dubbed "E-Call." When Cohasset's zipcode is entered following a call to the hotline, a voicemail message will be played, detailing Cohasset's latest recycling news.

Conservation group may sue if Greenbush is stopped compensate for increases in pollution and traffic congestion when the central artery is complete.

According to Thiebach, the foundation is looking for both air pollution mitigation and alleviation of traffic congestion.

"The South Shore is desperately in need of transit access," Thiebach said.

And CLF has these mitigation measures in writing. All of the agreements with the MBTA appear in the state's Transit Regulations and are part of the state implementation plan under the Clean Air Act, Thiebach said.

Brennan explained that there are many pieces to this mitigation puzzle and each one, including the Old Colony project, has a deadline. Construction on the Plymouth and Middleboro lines is already underway and both lines should be up and running by the end of 1996.

Brennan and Thiebach are in agreement that the rail option for Greenbush is the most effective and efficient choice. But Brennan said that given the political situation and the controversy on the South Shore, rail is not a practical choice.

The anti-rail Coastal Coalition has helped fuel the controversy over Greenbush rail restoration, raising safety and environmental impact concerns, and criticizing the MBTA Supplemental Draft Environmental Impact Report. The report, which studied nine transportation alternatives for the corridor found that rail was the most cost efficient and effective mode of transit and the one that would meet the Clean Air Act standards. Town meetings and referenda show that Greenbush communities are split on the issue of rail restoration.

MBTA feasibility studies on the guided busway alternative just recently introduced into the transit mix are well underway, Brennan said, and Kerasiotes is expected to comment on the two Greenbush options currently under consideration (the busway and commuter rail) after Labor Day.

The guided busway has little support on the South Shore among both rail opponents and proponents and Thiebach said CLF is very skeptical that the busway can meet the emission standards and the transportation needs of the South Shore.

"Based on what we saw on the Supplemental Draft Environmental Impact Report, it appears that commuter rail would provide the most benefits," Thiebach said.

In a recent letter to Kerasiotes, CLF Deputy Director Alan Wilson wrote: "The time for debate over alternatives to this project has passed without the identification of a substitute that would yield equivalent benefits to commuter rail service."

Wilson pointed out that commuter rail in the Commonwealth has proven to be a popular form of transit with regional ridership rising by 1.4 million riders or 7.8 percent in the year between the second quarters of 1993 and 1994.

"In CLF's view, the time has come to focus on implementation and on reasonable and feasible mitigation measures for reestablishing Greenbush commuter rail service," he said.

If the busway concept is to be considered in earnest, Thiebach said like any additional alternatives, it has to be done so under the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act (MEPA) process.

"They would need a supplemental Supplemental Draft Environmental Impact Report on the busway alternative and other alternatives if they are to re-open the process," she said.

And if such a review is to take place, Wilson maintained that it should include other alternatives.

"To limit further review arbitrarily to one alternative — which has in our view very limited potential for achieving benefits equivalent to those of commuter rail and has been greeted with skepticism by all concerned — is not in the public's interest," he said.

The MBTA can file with the Department of Environmental Protection for an extension on the Greenbush project and with a 1996 deadline, will likely have to do so, Brennan said.

Still, Thiebach maintained that CLF will do everything possible to make sure any project will move along as expeditiously as possible.

"It's time to move on to mitigation instead of new alternatives. Commuter rail seems to be the best option, that's why we should be looking at mitigation and not other ways we can do it," she added.

Staszko to sign conservation agreement

Cohasset Plaza owner Donald Staszko said he planned, this week, to sign an agreement that he worked out with the conservation commission in June.

Staszko said that his lawyer, Charles Humphreys, did not receive a copy of the agreement, which was agreed upon June 6, until Aug. 11.

"I asked for the signed agreement six weeks ago," Staszko said. "The agreement went to Mr. Humphrey's office Friday afternoon. I've been begging verbally and in writing. I have every intention of signing it. What do I have to do to get them to send it?"

At its Tuesday night meeting, the conservation commission agreed to give Staszko until Aug. 25 to sign the agreement or their offer would be withdrawn.

Commissioner Roseanne McMorris had suggested giving Staszko until Aug. 18, but commission chairman Thomas Callahan suggested a longer deadline since it might not be Staszko's fault that he hadn't signed the item.

Under the terms of the agreement, the commission agreed to reduce to $5,000, from the original $7,500 fine, the board had levied against Staszko for failing to follow its orders in the construction of a new septic system and replication of wetlands at Cohasset Plaza.

The board charged that the buffer zone around the wetlands in the plaza had been obliterated.

At its Tuesday meeting, the commissio ngave Staszko permission to install a catch basin since erosion was hurting the replicated wetlands area at the back of the plaza.

At the May 2 conservation commission meeting, Staszko said he had not realized that he had violated the orders issued by the board.

Officials, abutters search for straight scoop on pond

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

Straits Pond and its midges, seems to wind up on a regular basis before the conservation commission.

Tuesday night, the board held a lengthy, but inconclusive discussion with Theodore Ford on possible long-term solutions to the pond.

Ford, who has lived on the pond since childhood, said that although the pond is cleaner than in recent years, the lack of water flow has created a warm, stagnant mess.

"The pond is a filthy, polluted body of water," he said. "The water is cooking, it's a broth. It's soup."

Warm water has been blamed in part for the periodic midge infestations in the area. Opening the flood gates to flush Straits Pond with ocean water lets in eels and fish which eat midge larvae, while colder water is less likely to breed midges.

Ford maintained that Cohasset has lost control of the flood gates, which Hull runs.

Conservation commission chairman Thomas Callahan pointed out that since Cohasset has not paid for any of the repairs to the gates, Hull maintains that the town has abrogated its responsibility.

Selectman Merle Brown, who was in the room, said that no one has asked for money for Straits Pond other than the $2,000 for the annual spraying of midges.

In addition, Anson Wheeler showed some electrical devices which could automatically open the flood gates, thereby allowing the pond water level to be maintained at a predetermined level.

Commission vice chairman Edward S. Graham, Jr., who lives near the pond, reported that flooding is damaging the property of several neighbors.

Wheeler agreed, saying that the water level is unusually high this summer, apparently in an attempt to reduce photosynthesis, which promotes the growth of algae, a favorite midge food.

However, by to keep the water level high, the gates have remained closed and the water has been warm and stagnant, which also can stimulate midge growth, Wheeler and Ford said.

Callahan asked that the Straits Pond subcommittee meet with Ford and discuss some choices.

In response to calls for consultants to study the issue, commissioner Veneta Roebuck said that the pond has been studied for 95 years.

"We can spend $50,000 hiring a firm and I guarantee you, I've got it (their solution) in the files."

She agreed to show some of the previous studies to the subcommittee.

Callahan told Ford, "You bring up some very good points. The town and private homeowners may have to spend some money."

Staszko agreement

The agreement stipulated that Staszko pay $2,500 when he signs the document and another $2,500 within 30 days.

In addition, Staszko has asked for an itemized accounting of consultant Paul Shea's bill. Under commission rules, the applicant must pay the bill of the commission consultant hired to supervise a project.

Staszko said he received a bill from Shea containing 14 items performed over ten hours, but wants a more detailed accounting.

However, the developer said he is being treated fairly by the commission.

We are so lucky to live in Cohasset. There are so many wonderful people here. Here is a little story about our weekend and a very special man, Dr. Barry Tufts. Last Sunday a family member had a raging toothache (on a Sunday), and I called Dr. Tufts. Barry was out on a boat, enjoying his time off, and came back in to take care of the problem! And he did! Talk about people who care — whew, that says it all, doesn't it? World-famous buyer of estate and antique jewelry, Malcolm Logan, son of the late General Edward Logan and Polly Logan of Nichols Road, was at Cohasset Jewelers last Thursday through Saturday. His priceless collection included jewels from the estate of movie star Myrna Loy as well as Victorian jewelry (1837-1901), Art Nouveau (1895-1910), Edwardian (1901-1910), Art Deco (1920-1940) and Retro 1940s. As Malcolm said, acquiring a piece of quality antique jewelry is similar to obtaining an original painting — the fine piece is unique, the owner need now worry about copies and the item is a one-of-a-kind original. Recently Logan gave his mother an antique diamond pin shaped like an elephant, with a ruby eye and an uplifted trunk, which means "good luck."

Fifty years ago

They've lived next door to you for years, they work with you in the office or bag your groceries in the supermarket. They're your parents, uncles and aunts, maybe even your grandparents.

They're World War II veterans, most of whom have lived the last 50 years in quiet anonymity, raising their families and making a living. Being able to return to their homes after experiencing the hell of war must have seemed a profound blessing.

When you listen to their stories and feel their pain as they recount the horrors of war, it's easy to understand why these men and women shun the limelight every time another anniversary of the war is celebrated.

Thrown into the meat grinder that is war, veterans have a difficult time when asked to call up memories of the men and women with whom they served — young boys and girls, really. Their eyes cloud over and their voices grow soft when old wounds are opened and they are asked to recall what it was like to serve in the military during what was certainly humanity's darkest hours.

"It was 50 years ago — the war is over," veterans say, not wanting to recall the past. Many of them have made peace with the past and their German and Japanese enemies. Some of them have not and will go to their graves still bearing the emotional scars of World War II.

As the country marks the end of World War II and the surrender of Japan, it's time to look around and take note of the ordinary people in our community who fought the good fight and won the world-wide battle against pure evil, madness and dictatorship. They deserve our respect and our thanks.

For the most part, World War II veterans don't see themselves as heroes. Many veterans served their time in the Army, Navy or Air Force doing routine administrative tasks and never encountered the enemy face to face.

But no matter where or how they served, every veteran is conscious of having done his or her small part to win victory when victory and the future of the world seemed anything but certain.

Almost without exception, veterans support the bombing of Hiroshima as a necessary means of bringing the war to an end. The nation and its resources were exhausted from four years of fighting on two fronts. At the time, no one believed that the Japanese, with their kamikaze mentality, would ever have surrendered.

Dropping the atomic bomb, even with its devastating consequences and the enormous loss of civilian life, was unavoidable, veterans assert, and was the best way to avoid further loss of American lives. "They weren't ready to surrender. It was the right decision," veterans agree with virtually one voice.

The 50th anniversary of the end of World War II is a major milestone and is perhaps the last time that we as a community and a nation will be able to express our thanks in a personal way to so many of these brave men and women to whom we owe our very lives and our freedom. They are truly heroes and we are fortunate to have them among us still.

'Thoughtful' coverage appreciated

To the Editor:

On behalf of the members and friends of First Parish, I would like to express our appreciation for the thoughtful and sensitive manner with which you brought the tragic news of the death of our minister, the Reverend Edward T. Atkinson.

I would also like to take this opportunity to thank those who helped make the Memorial Service run smoothly. The response of the Cohasset selectmen and town employees was characterized by generosity and concern for the family's wishes during the memorial service. The Town Hall was made available for the overflow when the Meeting House filled; the flag on the Common was lowered and barricades were provided for handicapped parking. Continental Cablevision kindly provided the video system for live television showing the proceedings in the Town Hall. At the request of the Atkinson family, there was no rebroadcast of the memorial service, although audio takes of the service will be made available soon in the library.

Many commented on the wonderful music during the service. I would like to thank our cherished music director, Carolyn Curtis, who tirelessly prepared and conducted the 64-member choir, but whose name was inadvertently omitted from the order of service. Thanks also go to Sexton Bob Barrow, Brendon Mulcahy, Barbara Power and many members of the Parish for their help in preparing the Meeting and Parish House.

It is times like these when we come to understand the full meaning of community. The friendship, support, respect and kindness that we have received from so many residents and groups in town have been overwhelming.

We are forever grateful to all those who offered a helping hand both in celebrating Ed's life and supporting us. Thank you.

Are 'buildable' lots in town's future?

To the Editor:

Not long ago, Cohasset voted against building a sewage treatment plant large enough to service a good part of the town, even though most of the cost would have been funded by the state rather than by Cohasset residents. Various opponents gave various reasons, but apparently the underlying reason was elitist fear that sewers would make every lot suitable for building, and hence destroy the semi-rural character of the town.

But the Tutela report on Cohasset's sewage treatment problems, describes several technically advanced on-lot systems. It seems likely that technical developments will, in time, enable every lot to become suitable for building, using some type of advanced on-lot treatment system.

So what will Cohasset do about the March for Science? Maintain its elitist stance by forbidding the use of advanced on-lot systems to transmute unbuildable lots into buildable lots (the same lots that an expanded sewer system would have rendered buildable), while allowing advanced on-lot systems to be used only on existing homes that are trapped by Title 5 (even though they might have been rescued by an expanded sewer system)?

Officials to ponder policy on using police details

flaggers, "so long as such will not impact or otherwise compromise public safety," on town roads. The by-law does not apply to state highways or state road construction projects.

The town of Weymouth took the opposite approach at its May 1 town meeting. At that time, voters supported a requirement that only Weymouth police officers can be assigned to traffic control duties "within the limits of public ways and sidewalks" in that community.

Pratt said the issue of police details versus civilian flaggers in Cohasset is more than public safety. It also involves economics.

In the next few years, he said, "miles and miles and miles of Cohasset public streets will be dug up for what is the greatest infrastructure upgrade in Cohasset's history."

When contacted Tuesday, Pratt said he wants an in-depth discussion by the selectmen, as well as input from water and sewer commissioners, and the highway department on the public safety and financial impact of police details on the public works projects. He said he will bring up the subject at next Monday's meeting, and agrees with Chief Noonan that the matter should be clarified.

These projects to improve the town's water distribution and sewer systems will require municipal bonds and interest payments, he said. Monies paid for police details will be included in the costs of the projects, and repaid with interest.

Chief Noonan said that a police officer working at a road construction or utility repair site "gives me a comforting feeling knowing that there's an extra police officer."

With each police officer carrying a radio while working a detail. "there's an extra set of eyes and ears," he said, adding, "I'd rather see a blue uniform out there."

In Cohasset, Noonan sets the rate paid to police officers working a detail assignment, now at $25 per hour, with a minimum payment for four hours. He determines the amount based on what surrounding towns pay their officers for details.

Hingham has the same detail rate, but it applies to private contractors only, such as gas, telephone, electric, and cable television companies. For town projects, such as repaving a street, officers are paid at time-and-a-half. Calculating the base pay of a Hingham patrolman at approximately $600 per week, the time-and-a-half rate is close to $30 per hour. The actual hourly rate varies by officer since a lieutenant is paid more than a patrolman.

With a similar base-pay rate, Cohasset officers would make a similar amount if the time-and-a-half policy was in effect here.

Noonan said he frequently contacts police officers from surrounding towns to meet the needs for detail assignments in Cohasset. But, officers from out-of-town are paid the Cohasset detail rate of $25 per hour.

Several utility companies contacted this week said they support the use of uniformed police details to protect the public as well their workers, but added there are instances where flaggers can do the job as well for less money.

Boston Gas spokesman Frank Aricale said the actual cost savings from hiring flaggers cannot be determined because, "we don't know what their pay scale would be."

But, he said, any savings would be passed onto consumers. Aricale added that "every state in the country" allows civilian flaggers.

"Why is Massachusetts different? It makes you wonder," he said.

NYNEX favors leaving the issue of police or flaggers up to the individual towns, believe the communities know the traffic and safety trouble spots.

"We believe the Commonwealth and the towns are in the best position to determine what's necessary," spokesman Ken Horne said.

Police details are not a big expense for Continental Cablevision, according to General Manager Joe Hayes. The major expense was incurred, he said, several years ago when Cohasset was first wired for cable television service. A major storm that causes extensive damage to the TV cables could generate more police details, he said, but that is an unusual occurrence.

"We'll go along with whatever the town requires," Hayes said, adding, "We've always had a good working relationship with the police."

Noonan also said that there may not be much difference in pay for a police officer and a civilian flagger, when a utility figures in insurance and benefits for the individual.

And, any savings incurred by the utilities won't necessarily result in lower utility bills.

"I think when the true picture comes out, gas and electric bills will go down, but it won't amount to much."

Selectman Pratt said he doesn't want to "second guess Chief Noonan," and sees instances where police details may be the preferred alternative.

He noted a recent incident on Forest Avenue when a police officer working at the construction detail shut down the job when a piece of equipment hit a utility pole. The damaged electrical wire was arcing, he said, and a gas main had ruptured.

Also, the presence of uniformed officers slow down traffic more effectively on busy streets and dangerous intersections.

The decision of flaggers versus police details may turn on the request of the contractor who might receive a lower insurance rate if a police officer is present at the work site, Pratt said. Similarly, the town may risk greater liability if flaggers are used.

But, he said, the town needs to obtain valid estimates of the costs for police and civilian flaggers, and weigh the safety and financial issues.

"We should lay the issue on the table for discussion," he said.

Request to open tidal gates prompts flood of criticism

After a stormy one-hour discussion Tuesday night, the conservation commission agreed to consider a request to open the tidal gates near Kimball's so the sewer commissioners can study the effects on Jacob's Meadow.

About 15 Elm and Summer Street residents vehemently oppose opening the flood gates, stating that salt water levels are already too high, causing erosion, damage to lawns and trees.

Most residents did not appear satisfied by the answers to their questions and urged that the request receive more study before permission was granted.

Several people said that when the tidal gates broke last fall and remained open for four days, the subsequent flooding of their yards and basements caused considerable damage, killing lawns and trees.

Jack Noble, 80 Summer St., angrily asked who would be responsible if his trees died, stating that he has already discussed the issue with his lawyer.

Even though Cohasset is now in a drought, Noble said the meadow is still flooding, even with the gates closed.

"I'm getting rhetoric right now," he said. "I'm not getting answers."

Sewer commissioner Edward "Ted" Guild, explained that the tests would be conducted six times, remaining open for either 12 or 24-hour periods over six months.

He said the engineers studying alternatives to the state-ordered improvement to the waste water treatment plant, need to examine the tidal flow in the meadow because opening the tidal gates could be included as part of a permanent solution to the sewer problem.

A diffusion pipe might be installed in the march, which would disperse treated waste water in various directions to be washed away by the outgoing tide. Therefore, how the marsh drains is of paramount importance to the project.

While the gates are open, the water levels will be monitored constantly.

Conservation commission consultant Paul Shea suggested that residents be notified when tests will be conducted so they may monitor the water around their property as well.

Guild said the town's report on the possible sewer expansion alternatives must be presented to the state by Jan. 2, 1996, so testing must be underway soon so data can be gathered.

"We do need to have all the information available when we do make a decision," he said.

Daniel Coughlin, project engineer for the sewer expansion, said opening the gates would help measure the hydraulics of the marsh and could lead developing ways to make the gates work better. He said they are now cracked and could use repair.

He stressed that the testing will not be conducted during storms or for long periods of time. "We don't anticipate any real long periods," he said.

Coughlin also said that the introduction of more salt water would likely improve the wildlife habitat value of the meadow. He said that an invasion of the freshwater plant, fragmities, could choke out other species, which are more useful to wildlife. Saltwater might help reverse this trend.

The conservation commission voted six to one to close the hearing and issue a finding soon.

Commissioner Roseanne McMorris was the lone dissenting vote. She urged more study of the matter.

"We need a more in depth hearing," she said. "We need more information."

However, the other commissioners felt that since the testing needed to get underway soon, the sewer commission needed an answer quickly.

Ruth Rautiala wanted to share her favorite mixed border with us. She tells us that Thelma Harrold and her son, Don, work tirelessly planning and planting this bright, colorful border brimming with summertime color. The border is home to orange zinnias, yellow marigolds, purple Coneflower, fuchsia and pink Gladioli, and pale pink, salmon and red roses. The garden is located at 321 North Main Street and we can all so enjoy the color when we ride by the Harrold's home.

PUBLIC SAFETY BRIEFS

Tickets will be issued

Police will enforce fire lane violations to the tune of $15 per ticket, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

The March 25 Cohasset annual town meeting approved a by-law change allowing police to ticket violators on private property and the attorney general recently approved the by-law, Jackson said.

Cars parked or standing will be ticketed in an effort to keep the fire lanes clear, he said.

Particular problem areas with fire lanes violations are Cohasset Plaza, Cushing Plaza and Tedeschi Plaza.

Recently police have been issuing "courtesy tags" which are warnings to drivers that they are illegally parked.

Fire lanes are marked or posted and are a distance of 12 feet from the curbing of the sidewalk in a shopping center, apartment complex or similar locations, the by-law states.

Crime was up in July

July was a busy month for the police department, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

Police made 22 arrests: ten for outstanding warrants, two for possession of a Class D drug (Marijuana); one for possession of a Class D drug with intent to distribute, two for shoplifting, two for minors in possession of alcohol, one for violation of a 209A restraining order, and four for protective custody.

"I am very happy to say there were no breaking and enterings reported to the police department during July," Noonan said.

Noonan reported that the Roy fireworks display and additional harbor duties also kept the police busy.

"Our new recruit, Gregory Lennon, graduated from the Police Academy on July 7," Noonan said. "He received two additional weeks of department orientation and is now assigned to the midnight to 8 a.m. shift."

Noonan said seasonal Police Officer William Quigley has been a big help with the department's increased summer workload.

"He works mainly walking beats and has already made three drug arrests," Noonan said.

He said the civilian dispatch center answered 90 '9-1-1' calls during July.

Contingency plan readied

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln there were water pressure complaints in the Jerusalem Road/Linden Drive area last month.

"The contingency plan used during the summer of 1994 was put into effect," Lincoln said in his July status report to selectmen.

"In the event of a fire alarm in the (affected) area, a mutual aid engine will connect into the Hingham water system with large diameter hose and supplement the Cohasset system."

The 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. water ban has improved the situation, Lincoln added.

In other news, Lincoln said an inflatable safety car seat was purchased for the ambulance.

"The Travel Safety Car Seat allows for maximum safety in transporting children in the ambulance," he said.

A Plug and Wedge Kit, consisting of a variety of different size plugs and wedges of wood construction, was also purchased. This equipment allows for quick sealing of hazardous material spills due to leaks of containers. A wooden mallet is also provided so that no sparks will be generated around a flammable liquid spill, Lincoln said.

During July, the fire department responded to five structure fires, three outdoor fires, two motor vehicle accidents, made 47 medical runs, and conducted 14 investigations and 34 inspections.

Sailors savor fun on the sea

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

What many other hard-core sailors would have regarded as a disaster of huge proportions, Cohasset's Whitney Cook and Sam Murphy of Hingham merely shrugged off as just one of those things. Both agreed their experience in last weekend's Manchester-By-The-Sea sailing competition was something they wouldn't soon forget in what is turning out to be a summer of low-key sailing.

During the second day of sailing, the 15-year-old Cook noticed two holes in her 420 "antique" sailboat. By the time Cook, the boat's skipper, and the 12-year-old Murphy wound up a none-too-shabby-considering-the-circumstances 37th of 44 boats competing, they were up to their knees in seawater.

"The boat is 25 years old," said Cook with a shrug. "If we had better equipment we might have been able to move up a few places.

"It was frustrating, but we faced the reality we were racing with an old boat."

Murphy found it to be an hysterical situation. The quick-witted youngster who possesses a sharp sense of humor almost seemed disappointed the incident didn't escalate. "If the boat sank I would have rolled over in the water laughing," he said.

Cook, the skipper of the boat, who along with Murphy is a member of the Hull Yacht Club, bought it at the Squantum Yacht Club after competing in a Duplin. Because the boat demanded calmer waters to keep it moored in, Cook left the Cohasset Yacht Club in favor of Hull. Murphy summers in Hull and the pair met and found they made a good team — as well as a successful one.

"We started sailing together and did well," Cook said. "I have an easy time communicating with him. You have to be able to communicate with your crew. You have to get along well to be stuck on the boat together all day. Sometimes we can be out on the water for up to seven hours.

"We haven't done so well this summer but we're enjoying ourselves."

The pair had a more successful summer in '94, result-wise, than in '95.

Banner season ends with loss

Barbie was there, and so was Ken. Lizzy came from Vermont. Jen wore a mini skirt. The players' nails were painted bright red. There would be no holding back for Cohasset. After a sound defeat by Whitman in the opening round of the Little League District 8 Summer Softball Playoffs, Cohasset's girls in blue rebounded in their second game of the double-elimination series.

In a seesaw battle with North Randolph, during which the lead changed six times, Cohasset scored five in the third inning, turning a 4-2 deficit into a 7-4 advantage. Kellie Straughn's bases-loaded hit scored three. Cohasset added three more in the fourth with key hits by Sarah Donovan, Courtney Anton and Andi Shaughnessy. Inspired by a lead-off home run, North Randolph responded in the fifth with six of its own to tie the score at 10. Maggie O'Neil scored in the bottom of the fifth to give Cohasset an 11-10 lead going into the last inning. O'Neil struck out the first and last batters of the inning, and in between Maureen Equi robbed a North Randolph player of a base hit up the middle with a nifty play on a sharply hit ball.

The Cohasset victory set up a dramatic rematch with Whitman. Whitman jumped off to an 8-0 lead, and visions of the opening-round rout must have flickered through each player's head. Cohasset refused to quit, tightened its defense, powered up its offense and went to work.

Cohasset charged back in the bottom of the second in dramatic fashion. Megan Cox sparked the rally with a lead-off base hit. She was followed by a hit parade that included base hits by Shaughnessy, Donovan, O'Neil, Beth Smoot and Equi, a triple by Leslie Thornton and a home run by Straughn. The score after two stood at 8-8.

Cohasset added three more in the third on Donovan's bases-loaded hit. Whitman responded with two in the fourth, two more in the fifth, and another in the sixth to take a 13-12 lead into the bottom half of the last inning. Cohasset needed two to win and they got them. Equi led off with a walk and stole second. Straughn then proceeded to single Equi home. Cox singled Straughn to third. Shaughnessy put the ball in play with a ground ball that scored Straughn and brought Cohasset the win in another nail-biting one-run victory. After walking Whitman's lead-off batter, Beth Smoot did not yield another walk for the balance of the game.

The win propelled Cohasset into a championship showdown with the powerful combination team drawn from two Little Leagues, South Randolph and Braintree National. With SR/BN undefeated in the playoffs, Cohasset needed two straight wins to capture the crown.

After a scoreless first inning, Cohasset jumped ahead 2-0 when Straughn walked and Cox and Thornton followed with base hits. SR/BN came back with Beth Smoot was Cohasset's heavy hitter in the squad's opening-round playoff loss to Whitman. Smoot slammed four hits for the All-Star team, which went on to beat Whitman the second time around before being eliminated against a Randolph-Braintree regional team.

Dave McKee

by Joe & Dave

It was an epic battle reminiscent of Hector and Achilles as two highly skilled and courageous athletes went toe-to-toe last Friday afternoon. And when the final bell sounded, only one was standing.

No, we're not talking about Tyson-McNeeley but a game of H-O-R-S-E between Extra Points man Dave McKee and Silver Lake all-around athlete Tracey Troup.

Let's set the scene. The final session of the Silver Lake Summer Hoop Camp had just ended when I threw the gauntlet down to Tracey.

Troup, who graduated in June after a stellar soccer, basketball and softball career at the Lake, is a very competitive sport and accepted the challenge without hesitation.

At that point I reminded her of my stunning victory last summer in a H-O-R-S-E game against Silver Lake's all-time leading scorer Amy King.

Troup did not even blink. My attempt at psyching her out had fallen flatter than the Yankees' pitching staff. The battle was on.

However, Troup played some mind games of her own. Before we began play she requested a few practice shots.

"I haven't shot all week," she said with a straight face.

At that point I should have ran to my truck and driven away like a bootlegger. But no, I stuck it out as Troup loosened up her shot.

I gave her the honors and she started the game.

She went to the foul line for a simple jumper. Swish.

I got the ball and moved to the foul line.

Bending my knees fully and following through with my elbow and wrist I launched a handsome looking jumper. But it turned ugly in a Pembroke minute as it clanged off the back rim. I now had an H.

Troup got the ball and went to the left wing and toed the three-point line. She brought the ball up and launched a bomb. A second straight swish.

My heart sank and visions of a skunking danced in my head.

My jumper hit nothing but air and I was behind H-O.

Troup got the ball back and hit a jumper from the right wing. At this point I knew I needed to make a basket or this was going to be the shortest H-O-R-S-E game in history.

I eyed the hoop and fired a trusty jumper. The ball hit the back of the rim but somehow stayed in. Yes.

Tracey finally missed a shot and it was my turn.

I went to the top of the key and

Cook and Murphy outraced 30 boats to take the Duplin Gold Fleet division of the Hingham Bay sailing races and took top honors at the Hull Yacht Club Summer Series. They raced twice per week against other club members and by the end of the summer had accumulated the highest point total.

So why aren't the pair frustrated beyond belief that they aren't adding to their trophy collections this summer? The simple fact is neither Cook nor Murphy view sailing as the constant to which the rest of their lives revolve.

"Sailing is my summer sport," Cook explained. "Although, my friends say 'you walked off the edge of the earth Whitney' because I never usually see them in the summer. But I've seen them more lately.'"

Once fall comes, Cook will trade her sailboat for a field hockey stick in the hopes of making the junior/senior high's varsity roster. She was on the JV squad last year and also played basketball and tennis in the winter and summer, respectively. Talk of a girls lacrosse team has Cook intrigued enough to go out for the sport if it gets off the ground next spring.

Cook manages to find the time to squeeze in skiing and snowboarding during the winter months, but shivers at the thought of spending the winter sailing like so many others do on the South Shore. Even so, Cook wouldn't rule out eventually giving it a try.

"I would try it if I had a good boat and a lot of clothing," she said with a laugh.

Her partner already had his mind made up.

"I wouldn't," Murphy answered immediately. "I'd rather do something else." Murphy played lacrosse as a sixth-grader in a town rich with a successful history in the sport. He has every intention of playing this fall during his first season at Hingham Junior High. Murphy is an avid rollerblader and surfer during the summer. He spends much of his time doing both in Hull, where he spends the summer.

Also included on Murphy's resume are the four years he has put in as a dancer for the Boston Ballet. Murphy has become so accomplished at demanding art, he earned the role of the character Fritz in the Christmas classic "The Nutcracker."

Cook has aspirations of becoming an instructor next summer, though she won't be able to teach at her home club. She expects she'd be a junior instructor, but first must become certified in first aid and CPR. Cook plans to get certified this coming winter.

She is confident she can make the repairs on her boat that are necessary to compete at the level she is accustomed. Cook said she would teach during the week and compete on weekends in regattas.

Murphy, too, has no intention of giving up sailing because of one below-average season. He'll be able to start sailing in 420s next summer and may become a skipper. If he does, Murphy and Cook could still compete as a team in tournaments where Duplins aren't included but 420s are.

Cook has found sailing, for its own sake, the most enjoyable. Competition, however, still gets her adrenaline flowing and finds it to be a rewarding experience, leaky boat or not.

"When you're not racing it's peaceful," Cook said. "It's fun to compete against other boats."

And with Murphy as her crew, Cook has little doubt the pair will be back in the winner's circle in no time.

Hingham's Sam Murphy and Whitney Cook of Cohasset have won numerous awards in regattas and sailing competitions since they became a team.

two of their own and it might have been more had Shaughnessy not caught a runner stealing with a perfect throw to second base to end the second inning. Equi drove home O'Neil and Smoot in the third to give Cohasset a 4-2 lead. SR/BN responded with four in the bottom half of the inning. Two more in the fourth made it 8-4. Straughn drove home Anton and O'Neil in the fifth to bring Cohasset within two, 8-6. SR/BN got those two back to take a 10-6 lead. The Cohasset squad came to bat in the last inning, down four runs, but confident of pulling off the kind of comeback that became its trademark throughout the summer season. Megan Cox led off with a blast just over the left fielder's head. Only a perfect throw, catch and tag would prevent a two-bagger. SR/BN executed the play perfectly and the ever-hustling Cox was out at second base. Shaughnessy and Abby Murphy each followed with singles. Murphy's clutch hitting was a plus for Cohasset all summer long. Shaughnessy and Murphy scored on Sarah Motley's double. Cohasset pulled within two before SR/BN squelched the rally.

It is hard to pinpoint when a group of individual players becomes a team. Frequently, it never happens. The chemistry is just not there. This group of players excelled at team spirit, sportsmanship and maintaining a sense of humor. Just ask Barbie and Ken.

attempted my famous Bob Cousy running jumper launched on one foot. (This was the winning shot in the upset of King last year.)

But this time around the Cooz turned into the Snooz as the shot missed terribly.

Troup was back in control and fired a three-pointer from the right corner. It hit the rim and gently fell in.

Behind two letters, I knew I couldn't afford another miss. Tracey was beating me like a drum and I needed to stop her scoring right there.

I went behind the three-point line and did my best Larry Bird from the corner. But this Bird flew the coop and I trailed H-O-R.

At this point I noticed some buzzards circling above the court and I could hear the bugler warming up for the playing of "Taps."

Tracey could smell the easy win and went for the kill as she tried another three-pointer. It didn't matter if I was Dave, the Extra Points guy or a friend named Heather, Tracey wanted the victory.

Miraculously, she missed and the ball was mine.

Knowing I needed to do something to get her a letter, I attempted a foul shot with my eyes closed.

As I readied to shoot, a quiet voice whispered in my ear. "Use the Force, Luke."

I dipped and shot. Swish. The Force was with me.

Tracey was amazed. (Okay, maybe she wasn't amazed but she did say "Nice shot.")

Troup's blind shot did not find paydirt and the Silver Lake superstar had a letter.

Sensing that the big "MO" was turning my way I went behind the backboard for a tough angled, high-archer.

My shot cleared the backboard and looked like it was going to find the net when the rim rudely got in the way. Clang.

The ball returned to Tracey and she went to the left elbow for a jump shot. Swish and my goose was about to be cooked.

I missed the shot badly and it was now H-O-R-S to H.

The game was suddenly interrupted as a Fat Lady came into the gym and began singing. I took this as a bad sign.

Troup did not hesitate on her next shot as she quickly grabbed the rebound and scooted to the right corner to drive a three-point stake into my heart.

The stake and the shot were dead solid perfect. One more miss and I was toast.

I dribbled the ball twice and fired away. It hung in the air and came down with a sickening thud off the rim. That was H-O-R-S-E and the game.

As the ball rolled away I heard another voice. Only this one was much louder. "Do you believe in miracles? No."

I shook Tracey's hand and quietly slinked out of the gym. My jumper had let me down yet again. I walked back to my truck.

It was time to bring this H-O-R-S-E to a glue factory.

—David McKee

Road race enthusiasts have lots to look forward to in the coming months as the late summer/early fall season starts to heat up along the South Shore.

Runners who didn't make the cut for this Sunday's Falmouth Road Race can instead head to Hull for the second annual Nantasket Seaside Road Race. The 4-miler, which starts and finishes at Hull Junior/Senior High School, offers many of the same features that has made Falmouth such a wildly successful race since its inception in 1974.

Like Falmouth, the Hull race passes through small neighborhoods (Hull Village and Allerton Hill) and breathtaking ocean views. The race has grown steadily over the past two years and race director John Johnson expects the field could top 300. For more information on the race, call (617) 925-9249 or (617) 328-6855.

On the 26th, the action switches to Hanover for the Caljouw Cross Country and Walk. The race, proceeds of which will benefit the Mark Caljouw Scholarship Fund, will be run over Hanover High's 3.1-mile cross country layout.

So what makes this race unique? Runners within the same age group will run separate races against their peers. The races are scheduled to begin 20-30 minutes apart. The concept of age-group racing has been well-received by those runners race director Gary Edwards has spoken with. For more information on the race, call (617) 826-7219.

Also on tap this fall are the SIDS 10K Road Race in Hingham, the Marshfield 20K and Rafferty's Pub 5-miler, the Colonial Road Runners Half Marathon in Abington and Scituate's T.K. O'Malley's 10K.

South Shore runners needn't travel great distances this fall to find quality competition and well-run races.

—Joe Reardon

14th SIDS Road Race on Sept. 10

The 14th annual SIDS Road Race and Run-a-thon will be held in Hingham on Sunday, Sept.. 10.

The races benefit the Mass. Center for Sudden Infant Death Syndrome.

The start time for the two-mile fun run and 10K walkathon is at 9:30 a.m. The 10K race begins at 10:30 a.m.

For more info call Art Chaves at 508-653-5050 or Peter Katsoulis at 508-526-7860 or John Orshak at 617-837-7210.

Fishing tackle catalogs available

When fishing, there's no greater pleasure than hooking, fighting and landing or boating a fish. But when you can't go fishing you can read about the sport, watch fishing videos, or dream about fishing and the big one you will catch. And when it comes to dreaming or anticipation, most anglers enjoy poring over fishing catalogs.

Now there's a booklet just published called "Fishing Tackle Catalogs," which lists 450 fishing tackle manufacturers, companies and mail-order houses that sell fishing tackle and have catalogs. This mini-directory lists companies and mail-order houses that sell fishing rods, reels, lines, lures, terminal tackle, rod-making, lure-making and fly-tying components and supplies. Also listed are companies that sell accessories such as waders, fishing vests, clothing and rainwear, tackle boxes and bags, outriggers, downriggers, rod holders, bait-boxes, nets, rod-cases and many other items used in fishing.

Most of the catalogs issued by the companies listed in this booklet are free. A few of them may charge anywhere from $1 to $5 for their catalogs because they are expensive to print and mail, but most of them will refund the cost of the catalog with your first order.

By sending for some of the catalogs, you can shop at home and compare prices and find just what you need.

The booklet "Fishing Tackle Catalogs" costs $6 and can be ordered postpaid from Catchmore, Box 770036, Coral Springs, FL 33077.

Business Notes

Jobless rate in June

In June, the unemployment rate in Cohasset was 2.8 percent.

This represented an increase over the may jobless rate of 2 percent.

Specifically, the June labor force in Cohasset broke down as follows: 3,814 employed and 110 unemployed.

Cohasset's 2.8 percent June jobless rate can be compared with 15 other South Shore towns as follows: Abington (6.0); Braintree (5.6); Canton (4.6); Hanover (5.2); Hingham (3.7); Holbrook (5.6); Kingston (5.8); Marshfield (5.3); Norwell (4.2); Pembroke (5.6); Randolph (6.2); Rockland (7.4); Scituate (4.4); Stoughton (5.5); and Weymouth (5.9).

Commissioner Nils L. Nordberg of the Department of Employment and Training (DET) has announced that the Massachusetts unemployment rate for July rose slightly to 5.7 percent—up from June's 5.6 percent.

The national unemployment rate in July was also 5.7 percent —up from 5.6 percent in June.

"Despite monthly fluctuations, our three-month average for May, June, and July is 5.4 percent, compared to the three-month U. S. average of 5.7 percent," Nordberg said.

Nordberg added, "This monthly survey, conducted by the U. S. Census Bureau, shows that there are 18,000 more people in the labor force, 14,000 more people working, and 3,000 more unemployed than there were last month."

The July unemployment rates for the other 10 large states were California (7.9 percent); New Jersey (6.8 percent); New York (6.2 percent); Texas (6 percent); Pennsylvania (5.4 percent); Florida (5.2 percent); Illinois (5.1 percent); Michigan (5.1 percent); Ohio (4.9 percent); and North Carolina (4 percent).

Nordberg noted that the payroll survey of Massachusetts jobs in June showed an estimated total of 2,950,500 jobs: 54,800 more than in June of 1994 (a 1.9 percent growth.)

Citizens to file suit against state ruling on landfill

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

A group of citizens is planning to sue to overturn Environmental Affairs Secretary Trudy Coxe's ruling that the Cohasset Heights Landfill expansion request can proceed into the final approval stage.

John McNabb said that individuals, not the environmental group SAFE - Stop Any Further Expansion - will file the suit. Lawyer Kevin O'Donnell is now working on the necessary documents, McNabb said. Both men are active in SAFE.

In her decision, Coxe determined that the landfill owners had adequately answered environmental questions regarding the expansion.

McNabb disagrees, in particular alleging that information on the leachate plume, the direction in which material flows into the ground, has not been answered.

"We think the record clearly shows it hasn't been provided," he stated. "We feel the decision was so outrageously wrong, that there is sufficient evidence a judge could overturn it." The appeal will be heard in either Norfolk or Suffolk Superior Court.

Monday the town plans to file a notice of intent to sue (see related article) but that does not necessarily mean an actual suit will be filed, it simply keeps that possibility alive.

McNabb said the citizen's suit will serve to buttress the town's effort, and that it may address other issues. In the event the town opts not to sue, he said the citizen's appeal would then be crucial.

"We're doing it to back up the town, but also to be available to do it if the town doesn't do it. If the town won't do it to protect the citizens, then the citizens should do it to protect the citizens," he said.

Notice of the intention to file a lawsuit must be delivered to Coxe, the landfill owners and the state attorney general's office, which would represent the environmental secretary in the case.

In an unrelated development, McNabb told the conservation commission this week that SAFE is meeting with the Department of Environmental Protection this week to discuss technical aspects of the case.

He said Paul Barry, landfill owner, is expected to attend and invited the commission to come as well.

If no one from that board can attend, McNabb said he will deliver a report on the meeting at a later date.

In other CHL news, Thomas Callahan, conservation commission chairman, said that the two notice of intent hearings will be scheduled for Septembe[illegible] discuss the possible drainage and replication of [illegible] lands.

In a reference to CHL lawsuit against members of [illegible] commission, Callahan said, "Lawsuit or no lawsuit, we need to get the ball rolling on this."

Three boards to discuss Cohasset Heights

Executive secretary Gregory J. Doyon said this week that the town wants to keep its options open on a possible appeal of a state ruling in favor of Cohasset Heights Landfill.

He said the town plans to file with the state to preserve the right to appeal the decision from Environmental Affairs Secretary Trudy Coxe that the landfill's latest report complies with the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act (MEPA.)

In addition, Doyon said members of three town boards plan to meet in two weeks to discuss the situation.

A meeting had been planned for this week so selectmen, the conservation commission and the board of health could plan how to proceed. That meeting was postponed because of the difficulty getting the relatively large number of people together.

At a meeting last week, health board members agreed to postpone action on the Coxe decision until discussing the matter with other officials.

In addition, health agent Joseph R. Godzik said that Michael Leon, a lawyer working on the case for the town, will write a letter stating his opinion on the matter. Board members agreed that would be helpful in deciding how to appeal.

The Coxe decision means that the CHL request for expansion is now one step closer to reality. By accepting the CHL report, the state had moved the issue from the study stage and into the permitting stage.

Although Coxe made it clear the approval has yet to be granted, she did say: "It means that the long review process under MEPA has finally come to an end and that the Department of Environmental Protection can proceed with its determination whether and/or under what conditions that project can be permitted in accordance with the solid waste regulations and the Solid Waste Master Plan."

Economy continues to thrive on the catch of the day

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner Staff

In the last 60 years there have been plenty of changes in the lobster business, said commercial fisherman Herbert Jason. But one thing remains the same. This $3 million dollar industry is one Cohasseters depend upon.

Fishing has always been central to Cohasset's economy, said Jason, who noted that mackerel and vod were once the catch of the day and everyone in town took part in the fishing industry in some way.

"There were fisherman, boat builders, coopers who made barrels used for storage, blacksmiths and people who worked in the salt houses. Every family in town was affected by it," he said.

By the end of the last century, Jason said mackerel and cod fishing subsided in this area and lobster came to the forefront and has remained there ever since.

Cohasset has about 45 commercial fisherman, many of them work year round and their career investments are substantial.

John "Moose" Winters, has been on the job as harbormaster in town for just about a month, but

Hull youth in stable condition following boating accident

A thirteen year old Hull boy who nearly had his foot amputated Tuesday when it became tangled in a lobster fishing line was in satisfactory and stable condition. Wednesday afternoon.

Joseph Orsie of Hull is a patient at Brigham and Womens Hospital in Boston.

Orsie was on board the lobster boat Bessie S. just outside Cohasset Harbor when the accident occurred just before 9 a.m. said Assistant Harbormaster Robert Baggs.

"I heard the May Day on the radio and called for an ambulance," Baggs said.

Both Cohasset police and the fire department responded, he added.

Cohasset Police Patrolman Richard Abbadessa said the boy nearly had a traumatic amputation of his left foot at the ankle, but the EMT's helped to save the foot.

After the EMT's stabilized Orsie, he was transported via med-flight to Boston's Brigham and Womens hospital, said Cohasset Fire Chief Roger Lincoln.

The accident is under investigation by the Fair Labor Business Practices Division in the Attorney General's office. Details on how the boy got caught in the line are sketchy, Abbadessa said.

In his time on the force, Abbadessa said this was the worst boating accident he has seen.

"It's not something you want to see, especially on a kid," he said.

Leaders mixed about Hagerty Property public plan

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

A plan creating a parking lot and a picnic area at the Hagerty Property has received mixed reviews from selectmen who heard the proposal Monday night.

The project is expected to cost between $160,000 and $200,000 and could be accomplished in phases. It could also be at least partly paid for through the sale of the town-owned house and or the small building once used as a cutting

Police theorize 911 caller was a dog

You have heard of dog bites man.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said this seriously happened to the EMT dispatcher at 5:55 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 17.

Police received a silent 911 call which listed the call originating at 43 Elm St. All police could hear was heavy breathing.

Dredging project financing urged

In hopes that Cohasset harbor can be dredged in this winter or early in spring of 1996, Selectman Peter Pratt has been hard at work with local and federal legislators to make sure financing and project scheduling moves ahead.

According to Pratt, both state and local funding is in place, federal funds which will cover the lion's share of dredging costs are not yet in line. The state and town portions of the harbor in need of dredging amount to about 7,000 cubic yards, while the federal channel makes up between 65,000 and 90,000 cubic yards.

Federal budgeting for the work hinges on redefining the area of federal jurisdiction which can only be done through and Act of Congress, Pratt said. The Army Corps of Engineers, the agency responsible for the federal dredging completed its study on the areas of federal navigation in July.

The state has come up with $300,000 for the project which Pratt now estimates will cost less than first predicted. Pratt also noted that the town has come up with its 25 percent local match for the dredging and has covered the costs - about $40,000 for engineering studies undertaken by Nucci Vine Associates of Newburyport.

Giant strides in this complicated legislative process were made at the end of uly when Senators Edward Kennedy and John Kerry filed legislation on the redefining of federal lines in the Senate and Congressman Gerry Studds filed the same bill in the House.

Pratt said both Kerry and Kennedy made eloquent comments for the congressional record on the need for dredging in Cohasset. By filing in the Senate first and attempting to attach this legislation to the Coast Guard Authorization Bill coming out of the Senate Commerce Committee, Pratt hopes to speeding up what can be a long an arduous process.

"Our goal is still to have the harbor dredged this winter," Pratt said, but noted that both Kennedy and Kerry warned him that considering the political situation in Washington, it is not likely this dredging bill will sail through right away.

In the meantime, Pratt said he will take the Senators' and Congressman Studds up on their offer to arrange a meeting with the Army Corps of Engineers and move everything short of the actual dredging work, forward.

"We want them to do everything involved with the project as if this has already been passed," Pratt said.

Chief aids in lottery arrest

Police Chief Brian Noonan joined a police chase which led to the the arrest of two Hull men and a Abington man wanted in connection with attempted larceny of lottery tickets at Hennessey's.

Police are investigating whether these suspects are wanted in similar incidents of larceny of lottery tickets in Scituate, Rockland, Canton, Athol and Methuen.

James Arnstein, 44 of 25 Midledge Road, Hull was arrested for larceny over $250 and two counts of attempted larceny. Michael A. True, 42, of 5 X St. Hull was arrested for larceny over $250 and two counts of attempted larceny. Edward Chamberlain, 32, of 215 Col. Hunt Dr. Abington was charged with attempted larceny, disorderly person and other default warrants.

Police said in prior incidents, suspects were reported to disarm the store clerk or cause a disruption while another person stole the lottery tickets.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said Arnstein and True entered Hennessey's. After the pair left the store, the clerk found $540 worth of lottery tickets were missing. The pair returned to the store and Mary Lou's News Aug. 13 but did not succeed in taking any tickets.

A store clerk identified the pair again when they entered Hennessey's at 3:33 p.m. Aug. 17. The clerk called police who surrounded the store. Chamberlain fled but was apprehended by Chief Noonan after a police chase through backyards, railroad tracks and woods.

Chamberlain, wanted by other police departments on other warrants was held on $5,000 cash bail at his arraignment while Arnstein was held on $500. True was released to Athol police for warrant charges.

All three pleaded not guilty with a return hearing of Sept. 6.

"Advise Me, Mr. Grillo, How Often Should My Orientals Be Cleaned?"

The simple answer is, you need to vacuum your rugs at least once a week and have them professionally cleaned every three to five years. Cleaning not only brightens your rugs' colors but removes abrasive grit and the spilled foods that attract textile insects! So it really protects the investment you've made in your rugs. You'll find all this and more in my booklet on the care of Oriental rugs. It's filled with important information you can use and it's yours for the asking. We also offer pick-up and delivery service, or you can use our cash-and-carry service and save 25%. I'm George Grillo, and we're at 100 Messina Drive, Braintree, 1-800-649-7707.

House renovations reviewed

Renovations undertaken by Paul Trendowicz to a house at 33 Parker Ave. did not fall under its jurisdiction, the conservation commission decided recently.

The committee voted to issue a negative determination after a review of the situation determined that the remodeling did not alter the original footprint of the house. They also found that a rebuilt deck and stairway simply replaced existing structures.

Remodeling or reconstruction which conforms to the original building is permitted under the Wetlands Protection Act.

Board member Jeffrey Waal reminded Trendowicz and his engineer, Robert Alvarez, that any work done in the wetlands area must be reviewed by the committee.

Trendowicz said he understood. He has filed a notice of intent for the work on utilities at the site.

Con.Trust presents check

At their meeting last week, the water commission gratefully accepted the fourth and final payment, $50,000, from the Cohasset Conservation Trust toward the purchase of 37 acres on Lily Pond.

Jack Hubbard and Sumner Smith of the private conservation group gave the check to Frederick Koed, commission chairman.

Town meeting approved the purchase of the land in 1990, which had been slated for a subdivision of 11 houses, known as Lilly Pond Estates.

It was feared that the subdivision could contaminate Cohasset's water supply, which comes from that pond.

Water department revenue and gifts from the trust have paid the interest on the $1.9 million loan which purchased the property.

The trust pledged $200,000 in 1990, raising the money in part from the sale of the Old Salt House at Cohasset Harbor and with a contribution from Mrs. A. Werk Cook.

Since its fonding in 1967, the trust has acquired ten properties in Cohasset, which it maintains for preservation.

For more information on the trust, write Box 314, Cohasset, 02025.

"Where Quality Matters"

selectmen's briefs

Discolored water predicted

The new 12 inch water main connecting Forest Ave. with Jerusalem Road will be turned on Aug. 24 at 10 p.m.

The water department advises that since rusty water will likely result, residents of Jerusalem Road and adjacent streets should avoid doing laundry until Friday afternoon.

"This connection is going to help keep good pressure within the neighborhood," Richard Cohan of Cohasset Water Services, Inc., said in a press release.

No change on speed limit

The current 30 mph. speed limit is sufficient along Jerusalem Road between North Main St. and Nichols Road, selectmen decided Monday night.

However, they requested that speed limit signs be posted and that police enforce the limit.

The board acted in response to a letter from several area residents who asked that the speed limit be reduced to 20 mph.

Noting that the section of road has numerous sharp curves and poor visibility in many places, the letter said, "Of late, there have been numerous instances where automobiles traveling at excess speeds have caused bike riders and pedestrians to literally jump off the road to avoid being hit. This action (a 20 mph. limit) by the board is necessary to avoid a tragic accident."

The first signatures on the letter were James and Donna French, and John and Susan Carr, of Jerusalem Road, Pamela and Kevin Prendergast of North Main St. and Deborah and Ray Hanion of Little Harbor Road.

Although they unanimously agreed with that vehicles routinely speed, selectmen did not think a 20 mph. limit is necessary.

Selectman Jane Goedecke, who lives on Nichols Road, said she drove to the meeting at town hall via Jerusalem Road at 30 mph.

"Thirty is perfectly acceptable," she said, noting that 20 mph. is extremely slow and usually reserved for school zones. She also said that there are other equally dangerous sections along Atlantic Avenue and other streets, but that it would be impossible to post them all at 20 mph.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby agreed, saying she recently drove Jerusalem Road at 20 mph. and at 30 mph.

"Thirty has turned into 50 mph.," Selectman Michael Sullivan said, suggesting signs and tougher enforcement as a more practical solution.

"We live in a town where people have to drive very carefully," Goedecke said, adding that she regularly walks in that area and is constantly leaping into bushes to avoid being hit by cars going too fast.

T.M. to consider DPW changes

Voters attending the November special town meeting will be asked to approve a technical change in the town's transition to public works department. The change to a centralized DPW from the current system of separate departments was voted at the annual town meeting.

However, selectmen reported Monday night that the new position of DPW superintendent should take affect after the town election next April, as opposed to the start of the new fiscal year, next July 1.

They explained that the change will coincide with the expiration of Harold Litchfield's term as an elected highway surveyor. To change the status of an elected official during his elected term requires permission of the state legislature.

Town meeting will also be asked to approve a transfer of funds to allow the new department to start functioning prior to the end of the fiscal year.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said the changes are essentially administrative in nature.

A subcommittee consisting of selectmen Merle Brown and Peter Pratt will work on the presentation to town meeting, which is likely to include some idea of how much money will be saved by the change to a DPW.

Block party permit approved

Residents in the Summer St. area should get ready for some old fashioned family fun as a large block party will be held in the area this weekend.

The fun will be held Saturday, Aug. 26 from 5 to 10 p.m. on Black Horse Lane, since police and fire department officials did not want to block off Summer St. for safety reasons.

According to resident Sandra Noble, the festivities will include food and music and events for young children.

Selectmen this week gave their permission to close the street for the party.

Legal bills approved

During their Monday night meeting, selectmen approved three legal bills.

The July bill from town counsel Richard Henderson for $1,842.50 was unanimously approved.

Two bills from the firm of Warner & Stackpole, for $875.11 and $13,606.35, were approved by a vote of four to one, with selectman Peter Pratt opposed.

In the past Pratt has sought to consider changing legal counsel for the Cohasset Heights Landfill case, which Warner & Stackpole is now handling.

selectmen's briefs

Special town meeting Nov. 6

It's now official: Cohasset voters will be asked to attend a special town meeting Monday, Nov. 6.

Monday night selectmen approved the date and agreed to open the warrant, to begin accepting potential articles for the town meeting, on Sept. 18.

The period for submitting articles will end Sept. 25.

Heights letter concern

Selectmen Jane Goedecke and Michael Sullivan, said this week they were disturbed to receive a copy of a letter sent by a state official to fellow selectman Peter Pratt regarding the recent decision made by environmental secretary Trudy Coxe, in favor of Cohasset Heights Landfill.

In the Aug. 11 letter, Jan Reitsma, assistant secretary of environmental review, at the state executive office of environmental affairs, told Pratt, "Your personalized attacks on Secretary Trudy Coxe and other individuals in this office are below the level at which productive communication is possible. Your insinuation that this office or the Weld administration has chosen to 'throw this one to the other side' is without any basis in reality. The record will speak for itself."

The letter went on to briefly explain the process under which the decision was made.

During Monday night's selectman's meeting, Goedecke said she was disappointed to receive the letter.

"I'm sorry that a letter like this was written," she said. "And I don't agree with the sentiment that Peter apparently expressed."

Goedecke went on to repeat her belief that the selectmen are more effective if they work together.

Sullivan said that the town has tried hard to maintain good relations with state officials and that antagonizing them could play into the hands of those who favor the landfill expansion.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby said that she heard via Republican friends, that Coxe understands the concerns of the town and that officials are doing the best that they can.

Pratt did not reply to their comments.

Both the town and a group of citizens are planning to sue to overturn the Coxe decision allowing the landfill expansion request to proceed to the final review stage.

Economy continues to thrive on the catch of the day

Winters did his share of lobstering for 17 years.

"It's a hard way to earn a living," said Winters, who estimates the average commercial fishing boat is about a $100,000 investment. With equipment and maintenance, Jason said Cohasset's fishing fleet is probably worth about $5 million and brings in a whopping 700,000 pounds of lobster annually.

Today was a good day for Jason, who despite a short outing and a late start snared about 250 pounds.

The licensed dealer is the middleman in the lobster industry who offers a price per pound to the fisherman and earns a considerable profit by in turn selling the lobsters to restaurants on the South Shore, in Boston and beyond.

Winters said one local dealer is meeting the big demand for lobsters in the European market and is exporting Cohasset grown lobsters to Italy.

Jason, who used to be Kimball's personal fisherman, now sells his lobsters to Yankee Lobster in Boston. The going rate this summer has been about $3.30 per pound, but Jason said it's been a tough season with fewer lobsters.

Many factors can account for a scarcity of lobsters.

These include water temperature, astronomical tides - when the sun and moon are pulling on the tide, the season - lobsters shed in June and sometimes in early fall and go into hiding until their shells have hardened, and storms - specifically nor'easters.

Severe storms often tangle lobster pot trawl lines, and Winters said it can take a week or more to untangle the lines. Jason suggests that fishermen set parallel lines of pots with a good deal of space between each line to give everybody a fighting chance during bad weather.

Knowing where to look for lobsters is also important said Jason, who admits his grandson, John Small, has worked to bring him into the 20th century - technologically speaking.

In addition to radar that helps Jason find his way home in fog, snow and other inclement weather and a Loran device that helps him locate his lobster pots and other gear, a video sounder shows him on a small screen, the type of bottom, the depth of the water and indicates the location of fish, but not lobsters.

The type of bottom and the time of year aid fishermen in ferreting out the lobsters who according to Jason like to be on rocky bottoms in the summer and venture into the mud late in the fall.

All of these new fangled electronic devices have made lobstering easier, and "soft on fishermen," Jason said.

It was a tougher job 40 or 50 years ago, he said, recalling the days when he would row 10 miles out of the harbor and pull in his wooden lobster pot by hand.

The pots, which are about three feet long, two feet wide and a foot high, were in those days, made by hand. Funnel shaped "heads" made of mesh allow the lobsters lured by bait - usually herring or cow hide - to enter, but not exit the pots.

Tarring the wood pots preserved them for many years of use, Small said, but noted that wire and plastic pots are most often the modern fisherman's choice because they are lighter.

Getting out of the channel is easier now too.

From early days when fisherman sailed out on schooners to the one cylinder engines of the early 20th century, advancements in boat building have helped the industry grow.

By the 1920's, Jason said automobile engines were being used along with a winch in the engines that could lift the lobster pots. Early fishing lines and buoy lines made of hemp and coated with a preservative usually lasted about one season and made lobster fishing a more expensive commercial venture until the introduction of durable nylon in the 1940's.

The hydraulic hauler made the back breaking job of pulling the lobster pots a memory and attracted still more fishermen to the industry, Jason said. Sternmen, who can help pull in more pounds per day have become the standard for many fishermen, who can with the extra hands bring in 500-600 pounds on good day. Jason fishes solo, but lobster fishing is a family affair with his son and grandson taking part in the business on a part-time basis.

Because the industry continues to grow in Massachusetts, Winters said the state has placed a moratorium on commercial fishing licenses allowing only limited entry as a means of conserving depleted fish stocks. Winters estimates the wait for licensing to be between 10 and 15 years at this point.

Protecting the species

Jason suggests limiting the number of pots fisherman can use and pointed out that in Alaska the state allows only a certain number of licenses forcing those who want to break into the business to buy a license from a retiring fisherman.

As for conserving the species, Jason maintained that lobster fisherman are conscientious about protecting the species because it is their livelihood. Escape vents in the lobster pots allow small lobsters out, he said.

"We practice conservation all the time," he added.

Relationship is still important to the town

Working closely with the town is also important for the fishing fleet, Jason said.

Relations with recreational boaters are good, and Jason said even during summer weekends, he has no trouble getting in and out of the small harbor. The town benefits from the fleet, which helps to spur on much needed harbor and channel dredging projects and fuels the economy by shopping for equipment, supplies, and gasoline in town. The fishing trade also brings tourists to town, to stay overnight harbor side at Kimball's By The Sea or to enjoy a lobster dinner at the Chart House.

Way back when Cohasset was still part of Hingham, the serious fisherman came from Hingham to this harbor and made this town, Jason said.

More than 200 years later, the role commercial fishing plays in both the town's history and economy continues to be a vital one.

"If you took the fishing industry out of this town, people would feel the impact. The fishing industry and the harbor make this town," Jason said.

Recycle your junk mail

The recycling committee and the Board of Health have made it possible for the following items to be recycled:

Envelopes and contents of junk mail, note paper, copy, drawing paper and boxboard such as shoe boxes and cereal boxes with the liners removed. Hardbound books and notebooks without metal binders can also be recycled.

These materials should be placed in the labeled blue container at the Cohasset transfer station.

Still not acceptable for recycling are: plastic or plastic-coated paper, carbon paper, tissue, napkins and paper towels, paper cups or paper plates.

The town of Cohasset urges all residents to take part in the recycling program.

Police theorize 911 caller was a dog

were able to get inside, thanks to a neighbor. They climbed upstairs and found a dog by the phone with no one in the house. All they could find was the dog chewing on the phone. The owner confirmed he nor anyone else was at home and did not dial 911.

The phone does not have an automatic dial for police.

Sgt. Jackson said police theorize the dog was able to dial 911 in some fashion.

The questions is if the dog phones 911 again, will the dog be fined for a prank phone call?

Hagerty Property public plan . . .

room which are currently at the site.

Selectmen have yet to decide what to do about the buildings at the site. They were also divided about the plan that was presented.

Selectmen Michael Sullivan and Jane Goedecke said that in general, they liked the idea; Martha Gjesteby and Peter Pratt expressed disappointment that only one option was presented. Board chairman Merle Brown did not like it at all.

They agreed to review the proposal and discuss it further at their Sept. 11 meeting.

The Hagerty committee has spent months working with consultants to come up with a plan for the 2.1 acre parcel on Parker Ave. overlooking the harbor, which the town recently acquired for some $600,000.

Hagerty committee vice chairman Veneta Roebuck introduced the presentation in the absence of chairman Alfred Moore.

Consultant John Modzelewski explained that the committee wanted any plan to fulfill two functions: to facilitate use of the boat ramp through increased parking; and to provide a place for public enjoyment of "one of the prettiest harbors in Massachusetts."

To that end, the final plan includes:

- a total of 25 parking spaces for cars, including one handicapped parking space;
- 12 of these spaces could also accommodate six cars with boat trailers attached;
- two of the 25 spaces would be reserved for live parking for cars with trailers attached;
- four parallel parking spots currently along Bailey's Creek would be eliminated.

In considerable detail, Modzelewski explained how the trailers would turn around for boat launching.

Between the parking lot and the water, a park would be created, including a dock, picnic tables, possibly a gazebo and a lawn.

Modzelewski said the area would allow people to eat, sit or walk along the harbor. He said it is important to allow this public access for those who do not have boats.

Landscape engineer William Fleming stated that plants which do well near salt water would be chosen, including sycamore maple and honey locust trees, rosa bagosa and juniper. A grass area would provide a picnic area and a lilac hedge with a picket fence would provide a border near the house on the property.

A gravel mixture, which is easy to walk on, would be used for the parking lot to prevent runoff which would occur if pavement were used.

Selectman Jane Goedecke said that while she liked the project, she hoped an alternative to grass could be found. She said that lawns require maintenance and are susceptible to salt water damage.

The engineers said that salt water damage is not likely.

Goedecke was also concerned about what turned out to be one of the most controversial proposals: dredging a 40' area of the channel to provide better access to the nearby boat house.

She said that the permitting process for that project could bog the whole plan down in the state and federal bureaucracy, which must review such projects.

Hagerty committee member Robert Davenport said that while the dredging was included on the plans, it was not the committee's recommendation that the town pay for it. Instead, he said the group hoped everything would receive permission and then if the dredging would be paid for by the boat house owners.

When Goedecke made motion stating that the board of selectmen support the plan in general, selectman Michael Sullivan seconded it.

"I like that design," he said. "It incorporates what it was meant to incorporate."

The other selectmen disagreed, stating that more review was needed and the motion was withdrawn.

"I don't like the whole thing," selectman Merle Brown said.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby said more than one plan should have been presented.

"I'm disappointed, I really am," she said, stating that several plans had been asked for including one what the site might look like if the house were to be demolished.

Modzelewski said later in the discussion that since the house is a potentially valuable asset, it might not be wise to knock it down.

Gjesteby also said that several people have offered to take away the cutting room.

Roebuck told Gjesteby that there was only enough money to meet with the consultant, Modzelewski, a few times, limiting the number of plans that could be created. She also said the committee tried to be realistic and accepted that the house might not be part of the final plan.

The parking configuration also drew some criticism.

Herb Towle, vice president of the Lighthouse Keepers objected to allowing cars to park in the parking lot at that building when the Hagerty lot filled up.

He told selectmen that since the town owns that lot, they are entitled to use it for public parking, but that if the lighthouse organization loses the lot, they will have to go out of business.

Under an agreement, the private organization rents the lighthouse cottage from the town. It has fixed up the building and rents it out to parties.

The town owns the parking lot at the cottage.

Goedecke told Towle that the Hagerty committee's plan would improve the parking situation.

"I don't see that these two uses (public and lighthouse function parking) are incompatible," she said.

Dicky Barrows of the Hagerty committee said he objected to the plan because it didn't provide enough parking at the site.

Another Hagerty committee member, Max Pounder, suggested to selectmen that three factors be considered in making a final decision on how to proceed: the number of cars that ought to be accommodated; the future of the house; and the future of the cutting room.

Developer Paul Trendowicz, who owns abutting property, has asked to buy the house.

Trendowicz attended the meeting with his lawyer, conservation commission chairman Thomas Callahan, but did not speak.

When Callahan suggested that the Hagerty committee plans be on display for public viewing at town hall, Brown said the plans could be kept in the planning board hearing room, 2B.

Dance of death

The president fired a major salvo the other day in a crackdown on the rarely challenged tradition of raising generations of smokers in America.

If you're not a smoker, you can take pride in knowing that Massachusetts had already led the way with a powerful TV advertising campaign against smoking and money put toward tobacco control officials and education. If you're a smoker, you probably resent all that.

Now President Clinton has launched an offensive on the national level. Naturally, the tobacco company fax machines were working overtime even before he detailed his plan to keep cigarettes — and the powerful and glamorous lure of cigarette advertising and sporting event sponsorships — away from our children.

Smokers' rights advocates and tobacco company lobbyists immediately cried foul, calling Clinton's initiative a "Trojan Horse" that will soon choke off — if you'll pardon the expression — adults' access to cigarettes. This is another example of government intervention, they cried. And we agree — but this is intervention that makes sense.

Nicotine is a drug, even if it has never properly been called that. Cigarettes and smokeless tobacco are powerful, addictive drugs. Just ask anyone who has tried to quit smoking, not once, not twice, but sometimes dozens of times.

If this is government "intervention" in the tobacco industry, it's not the first time. The federal government intervened decades ago by strictly limiting the number of acres farmers could plant in tobacco, virtually guaranteeing price supports for tobacco at auction. Unfortunately, that setup created entire communities in the Midwest and South where economies are married to the acres of waist-high tobacco plants, and the steady prices they bring.

If the government tightens the noose around tobacco sales, it will hurt thousands of farmers and businesses in tobacco country. But the noose must be tightened and this tradition of what amounts to uncontrolled, high-visibility drug marketing has to end.

Cigarette companies have had free rein to lure generation after generation into this world of addiction and eventual disease. The federal government's move to cut teenagers off from cigarettes and to push regulation of nicotine as the drug that it is, is long overdue.

Massachusetts has cracked down on cigarette sales to minors. It's time the feds stepped up to the plate, and this comprehensive crackdown is a powerful sign. The image of cigarette smoking must be stripped of its glamor, severed from its long marriage to race cars and sports tournaments and feeling young and "springtime fresh."

If you weigh into this battle, remember one thing: Smokers are not the enemy. The cigarette companies are the bad guys in this dance of death.

Cigarette retailers fume over threatened ban

By David Wolcott Jr.
Mariner staff

Local reaction to President Clinton's tough stand on underage smoking has been mixed, with area health officials praising the changes and convenience store industry leaders calling it a possibly insurmountable blow to the small businessman.

President Clinton proposed the changes to crack down on the growing number of youths who are getting addicted to the smoking habit.

Some of the proposed restrictions include banning cigarette machines from places that are frequented by minors, and requiring that proof of age be provided when purchasing a tobacco product.

Restrictions are also planned on where cigarettes can be advertised, as well as how the products can be promoted.

Reaction from the convenience store industry to the proposed changes was immediate, calling the regulations too stringent and onerous.

Tedeschi Food Shops President John Ransom said the convenience store industry is "way ahead of the curve" on the changes that have been proposed.

"We know that just like alcohol and the lottery, tobacco is an age-restricted product," said Ransom. "Over the last few years we have taken measures to control the sale of tobacco products to only those over the age of 18."

Along with continuing employee education about cigarette sale issues, Ransom said his company has mirrored local board of health and tobacco collaborative efforts in conducting anonymous compliance checks on their own stores.

"We have been stung in the past, but we are getting better and will continue to address the issue," said Ransom, adding that one area that needs to be addressed is an irregularity in laws surrounding the sales of lottery tickets, alcohol, and cigarettes.

It is illegal for minors to purchase alcohol and lottery tickets, but not cigarettes. With tobacco sales it is not illegal for an underage person to attempt to purchase the product, but it is illegal for a store to sell to a minor.

With the cigarette sales laws as they stand, there is no punishment for a minor who attempts to purchase the products.

Ransom said the inequality of the laws places an "unfair burden" on the merchant, and that the issue needs to be addressed at some point by lawmakers..

"People need to be held responsible for their actions on both sides of the issue," said Ransom. "As it stands, the merchant is placed in a precarious situation with the person attempting to purchase the cigarettes accepting no responsibility at all."

According to Massachusetts General Laws, stores caught selling tobacco products to minors can be fined $100 for the first offense, with fines increasing $100 with each subsequent offense.

Kathy Flaherty, executive director of the New England Association of Convenience Stores, said the strict measures could go far in putting some stores out of business.

"It is still legal for stores to sell and merchandise cigarettes to people over the age of 18," said Flaherty, and that the product should be treated like any other sold over the counter.

The NEACS regional trade association represents more than 2,000 convenience stores of all sizes around the region.

"Cigarette sales to minors are a priority issue that we have been actively trying to address for the last two to three years through education and training," explained Flaherty.

Flaherty added that a banning of so-called "point of sale" advertising racks for tobacco products could have a negative effect on both chains and independent convenience stores.

The racks are usually located in a prime spot adjacent to the cash register, and are filled with packs of cigarettes from a specific manufacturer.

On the average, Flaherty said that a store can receive as much as $5,000 a year from a tobacco company for a preferred placement of their product rack.

"To either an independent businessman or a large chain store, that is a large amount of cash flow to no longer have available," said Flaherty. "To some businesses which depend on that money it could be a catastrophic loss."

Education and training of retailers to avoid selling cigarettes to minors is an ongoing process at NEASC, which has conducted seminars in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire in tandem with the respective attorney general's offices.

Flaherty estimated that 1,000 retailers were involved with NEASC server training over the last year.

"In general, we go over the best ways not to sell to an underage person, how to deal with an irate customer, as well as how to spot someone using a fake I.D. to get the cigarettes," she said. "Similar to the sales of alcohol, we tell retailers if they look to be under 21, ask them for identification."

Flaherty said some of the larger convenience store chains such as the Southland Corporation, which owns the 7-11 chain of stores, and Tedeschi Food Shops conduct their own training sessions along with using the material offered by NEACS.

She added that most of the major cigarette companies have been pro-active in the fight against the sales of their products to underage patrons.

Some have placed reminders around the cash register of the illegality in selling tobacco products to people under the age of 18.

One of the larger cigarette manufacturers, Phillip Morris USA, has announced plans to incorporate an "Underage Sales Prohibited" warning onto their individual packages of cigarettes.

Day tripping

By Laura Ricketson Doherty
Special to the Mariner

No matter how many times I arrive at Maine's ever-so-popular Marginal Way, its instant assault to the senses is always a source of wondrous surprise.

And so, like many others, I stand and slowly savor each and every sensual experience. Spongelike, I try to absorb them all. And, just as I am sure that I have reached the satiation point, another delight proffers its enticements.

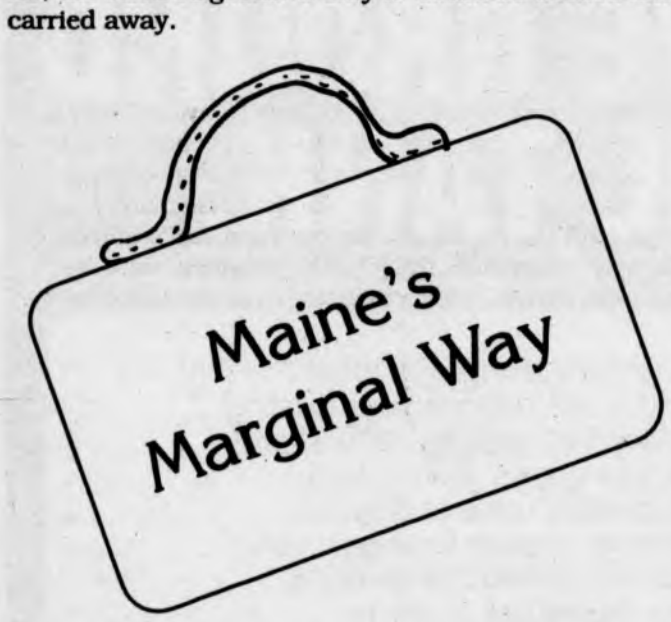
A favorite spot for writers, artists, photographers, naturalists and anyone with a love of beauty, Marginal Way is a one-mile walkway that follows the shore from Perkins Cove to Shore Road.

Having spent many a day in and around the area, we have developed the following routine. First of all, we part at one of the many areas at the entrance to Perkins Cove, one of several entries to Marginal Way. There are many shops and galleries along the way in and you may be tempted to stray. I would suggest leaving them until the end of the day.

Look for the Oarweed Restaurant on your left (more about this great eatery later). Behind it is the paved pathway. If you're like most people, you will have to stop to enjoy the view.

Gulls glide above the ragged rocks while below a graceful sailboat cruises the azure sea. The hiss of endless waves and of the wind through the pines is softly soothing. And the scent of it all — the crisp salt air, the Rosa Ragosas. If only it could be bottled and carried away.

Here is one of the many gardens along Maine's Marginal Way.



I find this area in Southern Maine to be more stately and dignified than other resorts. For instance, all the waste barrels along Marginal Way carry hopeful slogans such as "Thoughtfulness," "Compassion" and "Forgiveness." There are also more than sufficient wooden benches carefully situated for frequent stopping. On the ride in I noticed that rather than "No Vacancy notices at the local inn, they were "Happily Filled."

Bird and insect life is plentiful among the roses, goldenrod, Queen Anne's lace and berry bushes, which are often surrounded by tangles of wild vine.

Stairs are provided down to several of the enchanting coves along the way. If you time it right and arrive at or near low tide, there is ample sand on which to rest and spend an hour or two. Heartier visitors may want to take a swim, but the water has never been quite warm enough for my liking. It's also a great place for surfers, most of whom wear wetsuits as they chase the ever-curving waves.

Several lifeguards are on duty during the summer — one patrols long the beach on his board. A flag system is in effect: green, safe; blue, caution, and red, no swimming.

A place for everyone, families especially are in abundance. Children frolic in the waves when they are not building sandcastles or searching for treasures along the shore. It is like a scene out of Rosalyn Benchley's "The Shellseekers." Only the search is for the perfect rock rather than shell. Two young girls I met recently were intent on finding one that was heart-shaped.

Because Marginal Way runs along the outer end of a deep curve, you can actually look across to the crowded public beach of Ogunquit. We prefer the quiet and charm of the coves.

Should you choose Ogunquit Beach, you will find three miles of beach and dunes. It is accessible by footbridge at the end of Ocean or Beach Streets. Public parking is available.

One very popular activity is floating along the Ogunquit River past the beach and out to the ocean. Whether using innertubes or more elaborate rafts with oars, a graceful float or ubiquitous dogpaddle, everyone seems to be having a great time as the current carries them along.

The Ogunquit side of Marginal Way is a horticulturalist's dream — with just about every species of flower, plant and shrub decorating the many gardens along the path. Some are even thoughtfully labeled.

Inveterate shoppers should be easily satisfied by the variety of shops in Ogunquit. Atlantic Softwear offers comfortable, colorful sportswear and everything one could possible need for the beach.

Animal Crackers has mugs for the puppy lover from Afghan to Yorkie. Their biggest seller is the Cat's Meow Village Series. Upscale clothing is available at Jack Frost's, and the Fancy That News Cafe or Native Grounds are fun places to stop for refreshments.

The Village Market reminds me of Cohasset's old Central Market. Its deli offers great makings for a picnic lunch. Not to be missed is the Harbor Candy Shop, where fresh fudge ("Divinity" is a specialty) is made daily.

If by now you're too tired to walk back to Perkins Cove, take one of Molly's Trolleys. For 50 cents you can have a nice tour of the area. My favorite is named "Tulip." Of course there are attractive window boxes filled with flowers under the front windows.

Don't forget to allow some time before you leave to explore Perkins Cove. Bound on one side by the ocean and the other by the Josias River, there is a wide variety of shops, galleries, restaurants and boating experiences. Watch out for the unique draw footbridge.

A great restaurant with food for healthy appetites is the Oarweed. Outdoor and indoor dining are available. The Christmas Dove, next door, and the Country Shop across the street are well worth a visit.

To get there, take Route 95 North to Route 1.

Walking tours planned

The Cohasset Historical Commission will present two walking tours of Cohasset's most historic areas. On Sunday, Sept. 17, the 1995 "Harborwalk" will tour the town's maritime area, once the site of a thriving shipbuilding and fishing industry. Altogether, Cohasset's maritime industry provided work for the majority of the town's working people during the "age of the sail." Shipbuilding began at "Ship Cove," now Cohasset harbor, in the early 1700s and continued until the late 19th century.

On Sunday, Oct. 1, a walking tour of historic Cohasset Common and the village center is planned.

On both tours some of the finest examples of early architecture in the town may be seen. Both tours will meet at the Historical Society's Maritime Museum, Cohasset Center, at 2 p.m. on the scheduled days, and the Society's curator will conduct both walks. There is no charge for the tours, but donations at the museum are welcome.

Teen center opens Sept. 8

The Cohasset Teen Center, 24 South Main St., will be closed for "vacation" until Sept. 8. The center will reopen on that day at 7 p.m.

Pool, ping pong, computer games, music, cable TV and an atmosphere of friendship are available at the center, which is supervised by a Teen Center staff.

Cohasset High school and junior high school students are welcome, and admission is free. The center is totally supported by community donations.

Cohasset Youth Resources is the adult board that oversees the center's operation. Contributions to the center may be made at any time and sent to Cohasset Youth Resources, P.O. Box 11, Cohasset 02025.

All children who have participated in this summer's reading program "Reading is Natural" are invited to a party at the Paul Pratt Library at noon August 25.

Light refreshments will be served, and the winner or winners of the "Guesstimate" peanut contest will be announced.

So far this summer, 25 children have reached their reading goal and earned a free paperback book. The program runs until school begins in September. Participants will be awarded certificates at school in the fall.

Those children who have earned their free book so far are: Nicholas Aikens, Aly Belz, Isabelle Bertolami, Chris Bryan, Amelia Butman, Christina Daniels, Mike Devine, Corey Evans, Jenna Fegreus, Tess Foley, Katie James, Mia Lieb-Lappen, Ross Lieb-Lappen, Christian Manchester, Michael Martone, Emily Nash, Caitlin O'Connell, Margaret Pilczak, Tim Pilczak, Christopher Reynolds, Betsy Reynolds, Evan Sacks, Corey Steffens, Molly Trisler and Jessica Wheelwright.

For more information, call the library at 383-1348.

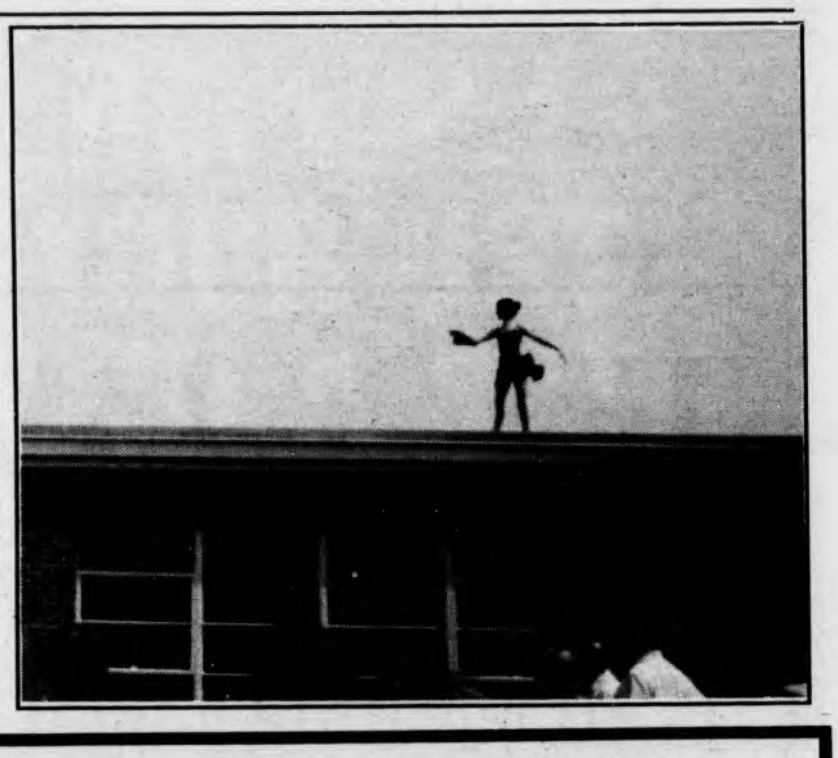
'Photographic Vignettes'

'Photographic Vignettes,' an exhibition of black and white photography by Jeremy Barnard, will be shown from August 17 through Oct. 3 at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Barnard has been producing award-winning photographic images for more than 25 years. His images include works from Maine as well as continental Europe and their environs.

Barnard's awards are many — including "Best of Show" for 1994 in the All New England Exhibition in Cohasset and "Best of Show" in the South Shore Art Festival's Black and White Exhibition.

Barnard — who resides in Georgetown, Mass. with his wife Arlene and son, Ian — remains addicted to the magic of the prints as they emerge. Artist/writer David Raymond commented that "his work is poetic in unexpected ways."



Adrina DeVivre performed a Spanish number on the roof of Deer Hill School.

Deer Hill Grade 6 students celebrate graduation with style

The photos were supplied by Diana Kinch to remember the festivities and parties held for the 1995-96 sixth grade graduates of the Deer Hill School.

Students of Joseph Becker, retiring after many years of dedicated teaching, honored him at a surprise party in their classroom. They sang songs to him, spoke his praises and gave him a touching send off.

Below, the 5-5-6 team was invited to the home of Trevor Hardie for the end of the year party. Some 70 students were treated to several hours of fishing, swimming, volleyball, frisbie and a full barbecue array. The day culminated with Mr. Schultz's famous egg-toss.

The graduation exercises were held in the Deer Hil courtyard. The principal, school superintendent, members of the school committee and the sixth grade teachers attended. There were awards, speeches and entertainment.

The gracious hosts, Anne, Michael and their son, Trevor were surrounded here by a grateful group.

Cohasset swim team wins South Shore championship

By Peter Berg
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Swim Team completed a perfect season by easily winning an unprecedented seventh consecutive South Shore Championship at Wheaton College Saturday, Aug. 12. In the 31-year history of the South Shore Swimming Championships no other team has won that many consecutive championships. Coached by Cathy Vaughn and Dave Leahy, Cohasset put together one of its strongest teams ever by defeating its arch rival, the Scituate Knights of Columbus, by 73 points.

Early in the meet, Cohasset pulled away from the field when the 10-and-Under Mixed Medley relay team of Alex Berg, David Crowley-Buck, Kate O'Brien and Robby Lehr won easily. Quickly, the team piled up points with wins in both the Boys 12-and-Under Medley Relay (Jeff Schneider, John Crowley-Buck, Chris Golden and Timmy Baird) and the Girls 12-and-Under Medley Relay (Gemma O'Brien, Maureen Equi, Kristen Osterborg and Ashley Ulmer).

The O'Brien girls continued their dominance in the league with impressive wins including Kate's 10-and-Under Freestyle time of 28.94, and her 12-year-old sister Gemma's 100-Yard I.M. win in 1:12.25. During the day they combined for eight first-place victories and 96 team points. Equally impressive in the freestyle events were wins by Robby Lehr (10-and-Under), Jeff Schneider (12-and-Under), Sarah Harkness (12-and-Under), Allison Berg (14-and-Under) and Justin Buckley (17-and-Under). Justin's race had the crowd of 300 on its feet as he touched out Scituate's superstar, Bob Foley, for the upset victory.

The Butterfly events produced some incredible performance by Alex Berg (10-and-Under champion), Golden (12-and-Under champion) and Allison Berg, who set a new team record for the 14-and-Under girls with a time of 30.82; good enough to beat a very good swimmer from Scituate by a comfortable margin.

The highlights of the breaststroke events were Timmy Baird and Kerry O'Hart who won the 12-and-Under and 17-and-Under 50 Yard events going away with very fast times of 37.50 and 36.63 respectively. Also impressive was Zach Markert's third-place finish. As a 7-year-old rookie, this was quite an accomplishment.

Heading into the backstroke events, Cohasset needed some wins to keep its distance from the field. Of the 10 backstroke events, Cohasset pulled out five victories by Alex Berg, Kate O'Brien, Schneider, Gemma O'Brien and Allison Berg.

With just the freestyle relays left, Cohasset was looking good to defend the championship. Starting off a string of four consecutive relay victories was the relay team of Kate O'Brien, Scotty Faber, Julie Shea and Robby Lehr who easily defeated all other challengers in the Mixed 10-and-Under event. Coming up next was the 12-and-Under boys team of

Nilan knuckles his way into NHL coaching ranks

By David McKee
Mariner staff

Chris Nilan has never been one to step back from a challenge.

As a tough-guy forward for the Montreal Canadiens, "Knuckles" led the Habs to a Stanley Cup victory in '86. He later skated for the Boston Bruins where he was chosen to the NHL all-star team.

Now, three years after retiring from playing pro hockey, West Roxbury native and Hingham resident Nilan is getting back into the game as an assistant coach for the Stanley Cup champion New Jersey Devils.

Nilan, 37, was recently named to the coaching staff of Devils coach Jacques Lemaire as a replacement for former assistant Larry Robinson, who moved on to become the head coach of the Los Angeles Kings.

Nilan leaves for his first Devils training camp on Sept. 3.

"I was looking to get back into the game and I ran into Jacques a while back and told him of my interest," Nilan said Saturday afternoon after participating in the C. Fred Fawcettt Memorial Hockey Tournament at the Pilgrim Arena.

"And with Larry leaving for the Kings, that opened up an opportunity and I was fortunate to get the chance."

Here's to high school cheerleaders, every one of them!

Ever since a caller declared open season against the girls on the sidelines in the "Sound Off" section of the Abington/Rockland Mariner, the phone line has been flooded with overwhelming support of the cheerleaders. And well it should be.

It seems sad that the cheerleaders have to defend themselves from criticism when it is obvious by watching their halftime performances they're not just making it up as they go along. There's some work involved there folks.

Take a look at the backgrounds of some of these girls and you'll come up with an extensive array of sports and disciplines that transcends over to cheerleading. Gymnastics, various styles of dance and other sports show up on their resumes. Do these negative callers actually believe the cheerleaders who perform backflips, roundoffs and splits made the squad because they are have cute faces and pretty smiles. A pretty face will give you a good yearbook photo, but it's not worth spit when you're preparing a dismount from the top of a pyramid at the 50-yard line.

And have you ever seen the shape some of these girls are in? They're muscles are solid as rocks. Maybe it's due to the pushups, situps, running and the rest of their demanding training regime. Try as you might, you can't say golfers and bowlers keep up a routine nearly as physically demanding as cheerleaders. There's no doubt both sports require skill and hours of practice. But you can be soft as a marshmallow and still excel on the lanes and fairways. The same can't be said about cheerleading. Slack off in the physical training and injuries are just a matter of time.

The point was also made that these girls are "objects" merely at games for the spectators to oogle at during lulls. After all, they do wear skirts that "show off" their legs. One caller brought up the fact that field hockey players and tennis players wear skirts as wells. Speaking from experience, field hockey is a sport that requires skill and conditioning...lots of conditioning. The same can be said for tennis.

But the caller does have a point. Starting this fall, sweats should be worn for any girl who shows her legs while performing. That goes for female cross-country runners, gymnasts, bodybuilders, swimmers and basketball players as well. That way these females won't be labeled as "objects" any longer. Ridiculous.

One player, I'm not sure if it was football or basketball, went so far to say the girls' cheering doesn't help when the team is losing. In fact, it became more of a hindrance. Does the cheering of the fans, many of whom are parents, fall into the same category? Maybe this player would rather no one went to the games to support the team.

Let's give the cheerleaders their due and recognize them for what they really are: Multi-talented, committed athletes who work just as many hours as other teams while getting a smidgeon of the credit.

Whenever boxing is mentioned, you always hear someone say, "For all that money I'd get in the ring myself and fall down as soon as the guy hits me."

On Saturday night, South Shore Boxing Club heavyweight Peter McNeeley did just that in his match with former champion Mike Tyson.

McNeeley, who somehow was rated the ninth best heavyweight in the world, was dumped twice before the fight was mercifully stopped by his manager Vinny Vecchione at the 1:29 mark of the first round.

For his work Tyson received a cool $25 million while McNeeley picked up a $700,000 purse. (Which amounts to about $250,000 take-home for McNeeley.)

If that pile of cash sounds great for 99 seconds of work against Tyson think of boxer Jimmy Garcia who was killed in the ring a few months ago in a title fight. Or how about boxer Gerald McClellan who was rendered blind and paralyzed after taking a beating from Nigel Benn earlier this year.

McNeeley came dangerously close to getting his brains scrambled by "Iron" Mike on Saturday and it was a risk that wasn't worth taking.

Along with auto racing, boxing is considered about as dangerous an activity as there is. The goal in boxing is to hit your opponent with your fists until he is unconscious. If someone gets hit too

Cohasset swim team wins South Shore championship

Timmy Baird, Alex Etkind, Golden and Schneider who punished the field with an open-water win. Continuing the winning streak, the girls 12-and-Under team of Sarah Harkness, Ashley Ulmer, Equi and Gemma O'Brien pulled away for an easy first. To finish Cohasset's dominance in the relays, the team of Jamie Kondrat, Derek Bugley, Pat Leahy and Justin Buckley beat a very challenging 17-and-Under event on the final lap.

In total, Cohasset mounted 409 team points with 16 individual event winners and seven relay team wins. Several swimmers were undefeated in at least two individual events including: Baird, Alex Berg, Allison Berg, Schneider, Kate O'Brien and Gemma O'Brien. However, what made the difference was the team effort with all 33 Cohasset All-Stars combining for the championship victory. With very impressive performances by a number of swimmers including Markert and Parker Berg, Cohasset should come back next year with another strong team in defense of their South Shore League Championship.

NHL coaching ranks. . .

Nilan, who was working for John Hancock prior to the move, realized he still had more to give to the game of hockey.

"I enjoyed my time playing and coaching was something I always thought of," he said. "And this is a great chance to learn from the best coach in the game."

Nilan said he will keep his home in Hingham for the time being. He lives with his wife Karen and children, Colleen, Christopher and Tara. He has been in Hingham since '92.

"I'll keep the home in Hingham and commute back and forth," Nilan said. "I really don't want to uproot my family until things are more settled. I have young kids and we really love the area."

Nilan knows Lemaire from his playing days with the Canadiens.

He greatly respects Lemaire's style of play and winning ways.

"He has a lot of drive and intensity and I couldn't ask for a better situation to be going to," Nilan said. "He is a players coach and has a tremendous amount of respect from hockey people."

Eventually, Nilan would like to become an NHL head coach himself.

"My aspirations are to work as an assistant coach for two or three years and then try to move on to a head coaching job," Nilan said. "And I'm heading to the right place. Jacques teaches a system of play that has a lot of success."

The 'system' Nilan refers to is the neutral zone trap. With the trap, the Devils were able to aggressively forecheck and prevent their opponents from mounting any sustained offense. The trap helped the Devils skate past the Bruins, Philadelphia Flyers and the Detroit Red Wings en route to their first NHL championship.

"A lot of people whine about the trap but I think it is good hockey," Nilan said. "And if opponents aren't focused and playing with discipline, they have a tough time getting anything going."

Nilan said his duties with the Devils will be to work with the players.

"You need good communication between the players and the coaching staff and I anticipate my role will be making sure everyone is on the same page," Nilan said. "But I know I have quite a lot to learn but I'm ready for the chance."

many time or too hard, they can die.

Imagine what would have happened to McNeeley if Tyson had been let loose after the second knockdown. It could have been ugly and possibly fatal. There's nowhere to hide in the boxing ring and it was painfully obvious that McNeeley was in way over his head.

Boxing can look harmless from the comfort of your den on a big screen TV. But if you see just one boxing match in person, your views of the sport will change radically.

The sound of a fist hitting someone's face is a sound that is never forgotten. And when an unconscious boxer's head bounces off the canvas and his legs begin to twitch, you begin to get a hollow feeling in your stomach.

So don't think it was an easy pay day by any means. It only went 99 seconds but the injuries sustained in the ring can be fatal.

Those who promoted the Tyson-McNeeley fight and conned the viewing public into shelling out $50 bucks for the pay-per-view ought to be ashamed of themselves. Sending an inexperienced Peter McNeeley into the slaughter den against Mike Tyson was a disgrace.

Many think the sport of boxing should be banned and are amazed at why people would pay to see such a spectacle.

But like it or not history has shown there are three things that consistently draw huge crowds of people- religion, the arts and sports.

And on Saturday, the power of sports was shown as millions (including this reporter) watched the fight on pay-per-view.

It may be twisted but just as many will be signing up for Tyson's next fight.

Jeannie Albanese begins weekend with Hull victory

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

Jeannie Albanese knows the feeling of being behind the starting line of the most beloved marathon in history with thousands of runners from all over the world. The 34-year-old graphic designer is also familiar with the other extreme. But Albanese has always loved entering the more local races where the field generally numbers less than 1,000.

In last Saturday's Nantasket Seaside Road Race in Hull, Albanese embraced her first love and rode it out to a 25 minute 43 second jaunt over the scenic 4-miler to capture first place in the women's division.

Albanese placed 26th overall in the ever-increasing field of 322 and 32 seconds in front of second-place finisher Lynn Cornelius, also of Cohasset.

"I had a really good day," said Albanese, who started racing two months ago after a two-year layoff due to a lower-back injury. "The weather conditions were perfect."

Albanese, who set a personal best in the 1993 Boston Marathon with a time of 3:11, wasted little time in establishing herself as the woman to beat. She darted from the starting line at Hull Junior/Senior High School and ran strong into a persistent headwind as she passed Spinnaker Island and the Hull Yacht Club.

Cornelius and third-place finisher Gayle Laing of Braintree (26:30) ran together in for much of the race. They remained in striking distance of Albanese until she realized just how close the pair were to her.

"I pretty much took it out fast," Albanese said. "I wanted to get a jump start. I felt a little nervous the second mile when I took the corner and saw two women (Cornelius and Laing) right there. But it made me run faster."

Albanese continued her steady pace the final two miles to the finish line and broke the tape having averaged 6:26 per mile.

Albanese had nothing but rave reviews for race directors John Johnson of Hull and Hingham's Paul Muldoon. "This was a great race to start the weekend," she said. "It was really well-organized and run very well."

With the fall road-racing season just around the corner, Albanese is anxious to continue her comeback, but doesn't want to do it at the cost of reinjuring her back. She is currently running 20 miles weekly with the Oct. 1, T.K. O'Malley's 10K next on her racing schedule. Boston is there to be tried again this coming spring.

"I'm really babying my injury right now," Albanese said. "I'll be running the local races this fall. They're more fun. I don't plan on doing any more than 40 miles a week for the marathon."

That local girl thing suits Albanese just fine.

The South Shore Community Center jointly with the Council on Aging will hold its First Annual Golf Tournament — The South Shore Open Sept. 15, at the Pembroke Country Club. Play will be a Scramble with a shot gun start at 1:30 p.m. Interested golfers are invited to play in this tournament which will benefit the South Shore Community Center and Council on Aging. A fee of $125 covers play, greens fee, cart, dinner, golf shirt, goody bag and prizes.

Golf Committee co-chair Chris Horne anticipates a terrific turnout. "We're really excited about this first tournament. It's been very well received and we expect approximately 144 golfers."

Lead sponsors for this event, Bostek, Inc., of Hanover, a computer distribution company, an anonymous friend to the Council on Aging, and Dave Dinger Ford of Braintree, have generously contributed to this event. Sponsors for holes and silent auction donations are still being received on a daily basis.

The South Shore Community Center, a non-profit, privately funded organization, still holds the basic community belief and values; a special place to meet, share ideas, learn and laugh together. The Center has continued to grow on that idea for the past 52 years, as evidence: the Nursery School, Gymnastics in Motion, Computer Learning Center, Women's Counsel, The Business Center, and the Council on Aging.

"We're proud of our work and we will continue to grow based on our basic beliefs, that our programs and events enrich and enhance the lives of the people in all our communities," explained Nina Belsan, executive director, SSCC.

Second-hand trash pays town twice

Recycling is on the upswing, officials say

Dick Poland stacks recycled cardboard at the Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF). Corrugated cardboard, which the town used to sell for $25 per ton, now sells for $85 per ton, officials say.

By James Loewenstein
Mariner correspondent

At one point, demand for recycled newspapers was so low that the town of Cohasset was giving away the papers that had been collected at the Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF).

But over the last two years, "paper prices have improved considerably," and now the town sells newspapers and magazines for $60 per ton, said Arthur Lehr, chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

Prices for recyclables "have never been as high as they are now," he said.

Newspapers, corrugated cardboard, and plastic containers — the recyclables that make the most money for the town — are now "a pretty significant" source of revenue for Cohasset and "will help a lot" to offset the cost of incinerating the town's garbage, said Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown, who is also a member of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

The town now pays over $60 per ton to incinerate its "unrecyclable" trash, Lehr said.

Brown said the price of recyclables will "stay pretty much in the high range now."

He believes the high prices are expected to continue for years at least, although they may not stay as high as they are now.

Officials say the price of recyclables has risen because there is more demand for them.

"More and more products are being made from recyclables," which is driving up demand, Brown said.

Prices for corrugated cardboard and plastic containers have also surged recently, Lehr said. Six months ago, the town had to pay to have plastic containers hauled from the RTF, he said. Now, they are sold for $100 to $200 per ton, he said.

And corrugated cardboard, which the town used to sell for $25 per ton, now sells for $85 per ton, he said.

Recycling brings an additional financial benefit to the town, because the town does not have to pay to have recyclables incinerated, Lehr said. Every ton that is recycled saves the town more than 60 additional dollars, which is what would have been spent to incinerate it as "unrecycled" trash at the SEMASS plant in Rochester, he said.

The only recyclable collected at the RTF which the town pays to dispose of is waste oil, he said. All other recyclables are either given away or sold, he said.

RECYCLING RATE IMPROVES

The town is now recycling 50 percent of the waste that is brought to the RTF, "one of the highest (rates) in the state," he said.

Most of the town's residents use the RTF, he said.

Residents used to recycle only about 30 percent of their waste, but that rate "has come up tremendously" over the last six months, he said.

Glen Tracy, a member of the Cohasset Recycling Committee, expects the price of corrugated cardboard to continue to increase over at least the next 15 years, although there will be short-term price fluctuations. However, the

New faces to greet students as school opens Sept. 7

For Cohasset students — the opening of school can mean new friends and new faces.

And this year, many youngsters will also see someone new at the front door.

When school starts next Thursday (Sept. 7), new principals, Curtis Collins at the junior/senior high and Donna Hartlage at Deer Hill, will be at the helm of their respective schools.

And while Principal Linda Whitney is a familiar face at Osgood, an unexpected jump in enrollment at the first-grade level will present a new set of challenges there.

Supt. Stephen Hart said 402 students were projected to enroll at Osgood and as of Monday, 421 have signed up — with the lion's share of the increase in the first-grade.

"We're looking a whether or not we need to add an additional section at the first-grade level," Hart said.

Collins and Hartlage replace former junior/senior high principal Mary Ellen Gallagher, who resigned last spring to

Don't forget 'Nam,' local veterans say

By Charlene Vandini

Cohasset Police Sgt. Robert Jackson hasn't been to Washington, D. C. to see The Wall. But, he hopes to see the travelling version of the memorial to those killed in Vietnam when it arrives in Pembroke this weekend (see related story).

Jackson was a Navy advisor stationed at Nha Trang for one year, beginning in 1972.

Out of the 45 boys who graduated from high school with him in 1966, he estimates that one-third served in the military during the Vietnam War era.

The names of three of those classmates are on The Wall.

At Veterans Memorial Park at Cohasset Harbor, along side the names of those killed in two World Wars and Korea, are the names of Peter Albiani, Jr., Peter Cogill, Allen Keating, William Laidlaw, John Lyon, Richard Maree, Dennis Reardon, and Craig Simeone.

These are some of the names that Veterans Agent Noel Ripley knows for certain, but he has no list of all Cohasset men and women who served in Vietnam.

"It's hard to tell how many there are," Ripley said.

People move into and out of town more often, he explained. The more mobile society is coupled with the lingering resentment that some Vietnam veterans feel 20 years after the end of the politically unpopular war to make a full list more difficult to obtain.

Jackson agrees, adding, "Some people have personal issues they have to resolve."

During World War II, local draft boards kept records of servicemen and women

Cohasset's week

School board meets Sept. 7

The next school committee meeting will be Thursday, Sept. 7 at 8 p.m. at the high school. The public is welcome.

School plans to be aired

Voters at the November special town meeting will hear a report on the study of school facilities, which might include options for either a new school building or repair of the Osgood Elementary School.

School committee chairman Ralph Kidder said last week that town meeting could be asked to appropriate more money to continue the study. At the very least, town meeting will receive an update, which was required by the last year's town meeting vote authorizing a study.

Kidder also said that the grade configuration could be changed, with the creation of a middle school for grades 6 - 8. A new middle school building could be proposed, he said.

He said that planning must be underway now, since the Osgood school is out of date and crowded, while school enrollment is growing.

The grade one enrollment has already passed projections made Aug. 2, which forecast 119 students in that grade. As of last week, 122 students had registered for grade one.

It is important for the school department to plan facilities that will be able to accommodate the anticipated surge in enrollment, Kidder stated.

College courses offered

Enrollment at the new South Shore Charter School in Hull is full and classes for kindergartners will begin on Tuesday, Sept 5 and for the rest of the primary and secondary students on Wednesday, Sept. 6.

Starting in September, the Charter school in conjunction with Massasoit Community College will offer five college courses in the fields of gerontology, the ocean environment, marketing, early childhood development and English composition. The courses are open to all for a tuition of $250 per semester, but are free for juniors and seniors throughout the South Shore. The tuition for area high school students who can take up to five courses per semester and earn both high school and college credit, will be paid by the Dual Enrollment Program of the Massachusetts Higher Education Council, said South Shore Charter School founder and CEO Timothy Anderson.

For more information call Massasoit Community College at (508)-588-9100 extension 1313 or Bruce Stephenson at the South Shore Charter School at (617)-925-2225.

Brush chipping is slated

Brush chipping at the Cedar Street Recycling Transfer Facility has been scheduled by the Board of Health on Sept. 9-11 and also on the following weekend, Sept. 16-18. Brush will be accepted from Cohasset residents only.

The following restrictions apply: Place brush as directed by the RTF manager; no hedge trimmings or stumps will be accepted; no length restrictions apply. For further information call the RTF at 383-9627.

Water meeting Sept. 6

The next meeting of the water commissioners will be held at the water plant near the intersection of King and Pond Streets, Wednesday, Sept. 6, at 7:30 p.m.

Town meeting Nov. 6

It's now official: Cohasset voters will be asked to attend a special town meeting Monday, Nov. 6.

Monday night selectmen approved the date and agreed to open the warrant, to begin accepting potential articles for the town meeting, on Sept. 18.

The period for submitting articles will end Sept. 25.

New faces to greet students as school opens Sept. 7

accept a position in New Hampshire, and Deer Hill's Kenneth Ekberg, who took an early retirement a year ago.

Ten new teachers are on board, Hart said. Some are replacing retirees or teachers who have left the system and others are substituting for those on leave of absence.

School officials now expect a total enrollment in the school system of about 1230 students, up from 1183 last year.

Hart noted that the increases will become the norm for the foreseeable future as the population in the lower grades burgeons. Last spring 65 seniors graduated and they are being replaced with 102 students entering the seventh grade this year. The junior/senior high houses grades seven through 12.

A fifth bus route has been added at both the secondary and elementary levels. And school hours, which are slightly different from last year, are as follows:

- Junior/Senior High, 7:34 a.m. to 2:06 p.m.
- Deer Hill, 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.
- Osgood, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Lunch prices — $1.40 at Osgood and $1.60 (or $2.25 for the deluxe lunch) at Deer Hill and the Junior/Senior High haven't changed. Opening day menu at all schools includes grilled hot dog on a roll or grilled cheeseburger on a roll, french fries, garden salad and fresh fruit.

Students may feel slight after shocks from the Education Reform Act, the three-year-old state law that sets out to standardize education across the state. This year school systems are required to have 990 hours of direct instruction at the secondary level and 900 at the elementary. To meet that requirement, early-release half-days have been greatly reduced across the board and traditional study halls are becoming a memory at the junior/senior high.

"Our study halls will be learning centers and not places where students can simply sit and chat," Collins said. "They will do work specific to that center."

Also under Education Reform, curriculum "frameworks" which establish state guidelines for subject areas are also being instituted, Hart said.

Don't forget 'Nam,' local veterans say

from each town. As a result, most towns have complete lists of its World War II veterans. By the 1960s, state took over this function, and the records are kept in Boston, alphabetized by name, not town.

While the legislature passed a bill to computerize veterans records, no funds were appropriated to undertake the job.

Ripley senses that there is a slow change underway. He has noticed that more Vietnam veterans have turned out for the Cohasset Memorial Day parade.

Jackson is one of those who marches, and notes that he hasn't missed a parade.

He has found Cohasset to be very supportive of its veterans. However, Jackson added, he has made no secret of his belief that the town should adopt veterans preference in hiring for town positions.

The Cohasset American Legion Post has "quite a few" Vietnam veterans according to post commander Steve Wigmore, himself a veteran of the war in Korea. But he acknowledges that others are reluctant to publicly identify themselves as Vietnam veterans.

Ralph Perroncello, commander of the Cohasset Veterans of Foreign War, said the post has 30 Vietnam veterans. He said several have gone to The Wall in Washington, D. C., and some may have plans to go to Pembroke this weekend.

Wigmore said some members of the Legion may visit The Wall in Pembroke as well, and noted that the post sent two of its members to Washington, D. C. when the Vietnam Memorial was dedicated there in 1984.

"It has all the names," he said. "It's like the guys say, 'Don't forget 'Nam.'"

'Skinny' Laugelle will receive pension

Former manager of the recycling and transfer facility Joseph "Skinny" Laugelle will receive his pension, his attorney said this week.

Earlier this month, Laugelle pleaded guilty to charges that he molested a Cohasset girl over a four year period, beginning in 1988. He was sentenced to 18 months supervised probation and ordered to stay away from the victim and her family, as well as other children unless he has the permission of their families.

Laugelle, 63, notified the health department that he would retire effective August 6. He entered his plea on August 8.

Cohasset town administrator Greg Doyon referred questions on Laugelle's pension eligibility to the Norfolk County Retirement Board.

Christine Roche of the retirement board's office said pension matters are confidential.

But, Laugelle's attorney A. John Pappalardo said that his client will not forfeit his pension because he retired before he entered the guilty plea.

In addition, activities to which he pleaded guilty did not occur during the course of his duties for the town.

"There's no legal basis for him to lose his pension," Pappalardo said.

South Shore pays respects to Vietnam War heroes

The moving wall comes to Pembroke Sept. 2 to 6

By Paula Woodhull
Mariner staff

Vietnam veterans call it simply and lovingly The Wall, its silent, massive presence a powerful memorial to the thousands of men and women who served in the war in Southeast Asia - Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia - but never came home.

Now in their 40's, 50's and beyond, many, but certainly not all Vietnam veterans and their families have come to terms with the war that tore the country apart for more than a decade and defined a whole generation - the 60's generation - by where they stood on the war.

Like politics and religion, the topic of Vietnam still elicits strong emotions and can easily touch off angry debate at dinner tables and political conference tables across the land.

A half-scale replica of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Wall in Washington, D. C. is coming to the South Shore this weekend. Organizers expect the wall, with the mind-numbing roll call of the 58,196 war dead and missing in action, may attract as many as 50,000 visitors.

"This is hallowed ground," said one of the organizers of the event, Becky Coit.

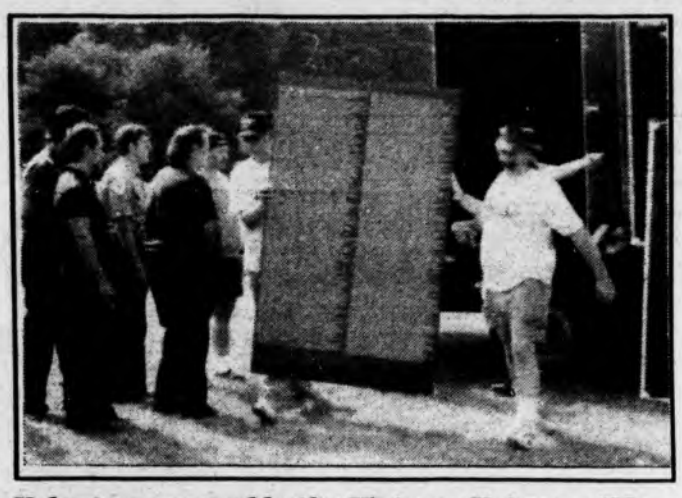
Everyone has their own personal reasons for being drawn to the wall. Some who make the pilgrimage to the actual wall in Washington say they go there to remember and grieve.

Still others, veterans or not, go to forgive as much as to be forgiven. To forgive their country for not standing by those who came home alive.

Perhaps to ask forgiveness for coming home alive and whole at all, when so many others died or returned home to an ungrateful nation, broken and hopeless in spirit.

Non-veterans may visit the wall to ask forgiveness for opposing the war and giving returning veterans a hard time for being "baby killers" or "capitalist imperialist pigs".

The "moving wall," which travels around the country, will be set up at the North River Plaza on Route 139 in Pembroke and will be open day and night to the public from Saturday, Sept. 2 to Wednesday, Sept. 6.



Volunteers assemble the Vietnam Veterans "Moving Wall" when it was on display recently in New Hampshire. The Wall will be in Pembroke at North River Plaza off Rte. 139 this weekend.

An opening day ceremony is set for noon on Sept. 2 with speeches by Bob McKean of the state commissioner's office on veterans affairs and Plymouth County District Attorney Michael J. Sullivan. A candlelight closing ceremony will take place at 8 p.m. on Sept. 6.

Organizers have worked to bring the wall to the South Shore for more than a year and have raised more than $5,000 in private donations. No souvenirs will be sold at the wall. Organizers ask that people car pool, if possible. The exhibit is free.

The 162-foot wall will be open to the public 24-hours a day with around the clock security, according to organizer Bob Rice, a Vietnam War era veteran who has visited the actual wall in Washington several times.

The transportable replica of the Vietnam veterans wall brings the experience of visiting the wall to people who can't get to Washington to see the real thing, explained Becky Coit of the Rockland-Abington Vietnam Era Post 2.

"You'll find people there at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning," she said.

There are 83 Vietnam veterans who belong to the Rockland-Abington Post and 350 Vietnam veterans in Pembroke alone, said Rice.

"People who will never go to Washington for whatever reason can at least go and touch the wall" when it's on display for five days at the Route 139 site, said Coit.

The experience of visiting the wall is especially rewarding for the families of POW's and MIA's, she stated. For these people and veterans who lost comrades in action, "It's the only thing they can reach out and touch. It puts a closure on things."

Coit said the firestorm of protest over President Clinton's recent decision to re-establish diplomatic relations with Vietnam proves that the war is not over in the public consciousness.

For the past 15 years Coit has devoted most of her efforts to the missing in action and prisoner of war issues. As for renewing diplomatic ties with Vietnam, Coit said "I'm absolutely, totally against it. It's way too soon. Most everyone I know is against it, too."

Coit said many veterans believe the Vietnamese government is still withholding information about POW's and MIA's. "They've lied to us for 20 years. They said they'd out wait us and they did."

Vietnam veteran Patrick Donovan said the war is far from a dead issue for those who fought in Southeast Asia. Although not active in veteran's groups, he has worked countless hours to bring the wall to the South Shore.

Donovan has been to the wall a dozen times and feels President Clinton, because of his opposition to the war during his student days, was "the wrong president" to normalize relations with Vietnam.

A West Point graduate with the class of 1965, Donovan was an artillery battery commander with the U.S. Army from 1967 to 1968. "We saw a lot of action" up and down the coast of the northern part of South Vietnam and the central highlands, he said.

"More than 50 of my classmates are on the wall, and from classes before and after me," he said.

After returning from Vietnam, Donovan still had two years to serve in the military. "I had two years to unwind. I didn't personally feel some of the abuse and hatred that some of the guys felt coming back from Nam."

Of the wall in the nation's capital, Donovan said he was initially dead set against the design, conceptualized close to 20 years ago by a young Oriental woman studying architecture at Yale University, a flash point of opposition to the war in the 1960's and early 1970's.

"I was very opposed to the design initially," Donovan said. "It was designed by an Oriental in that hated V-shape. It was black and in the ground. But when I ever saw it, it was an exquisite experience. It was rewarding to see that those men and women who gave their lives had finally received some recognition."

Curtain rises on Cohasset Dramatic Club's 75th year

Classics take back seat to popular shows

By James Loewenstein
Cohasset Mariner

This year, the Cohasset Dramatic Club is having its 75th consecutive season, which makes it "one of the oldest (community theater) clubs in the country," said club President Dawn Rota.

When the club was founded in 1921, members mostly gathered to read through plays together, said David Wadsworth, a club vice president during the early 1980s.

Now the club's main activity is producing plays for the public, which in this day and age puts the club on riskier ground. The club is having trouble finding adult males to cast, there is competition for audiences from other amateur theater groups, and a significant source of revenue — advertising in its theater program booklets — has run dry, members say.

Last fall's production, "Little Women," was the first time the club had made money on a play in several years, said Rota.

The club, which produces three to four plays each year at Town Hall, used to be financially healthier, members say.

Before 1980, the club had at least 200 members, which is nearly four times what it had last year, said Harry Heineman, Jr., a past president of the club.

In the 1970s, revenue from membership dues and advertising was so high that ticket sales were not crucial to the health of the company, said Florence Kelley, who joined the club in 1964 and has been a production manager in the club.

"It was an actors' oriented group who wanted to do something a little different and offbeat, whereas other groups would have to do something popular" to be financially solvent, she said.

Heineman, who has been a club member for 30 years, recalled that the club used to do "classics," like Lillian Hellman's "Children's Hour," Thorton Wilde's "Our Town," Herb Gardner's "One Thousand Clowns" and Anton Chekhov's "Uncle Vanya."

The club did "serious plays with literary merit," he said.

Now, he says, two out of three of the club's productions are shows such as "Little Women" and the "Best Christmas Pageant Ever," which use lots of children and which do not interest him.

"Kiddee shows have no literary value," he said. The club "never used to do children's shows," he said.

He said the club now offers little that appeals to him as an actor or director.

Kelley, who was also a past president of the club, said membership has been reduced partly because after the 1970s, there have been "many more theater groups on the South Shore" who have been competing against the Cohasset Dramatic Club for members.

People are also working more than in the 1970s and don't have the time to spend being a member of a dramatic club, she said.

The competition from other area theater groups has also drawn some of the audience away from the Cohasset Dramatic Club, Heineman said.

The reduction in members has hampered the club in its efforts to raise funds through ad sales for the program booklet, members say.

Last year, there were so few ads sold that the club lost $300 on printing the program booklets and will not print any this year, Rota said.

"Basically, the money (for the club) comes from ticket sales" now, she said.

Because the club is so heavily dependent on ticket sales, its board of directors last year decided to do plays that would be more familiar to people and attract a wider audience, such as "Little Women" and "A Christmas Carol," Rota said.

"We're really trying to have a wide range (of plays) and appeal to everybody," she said.

She said the board wants to do plays that involve children, as well as plays that use strictly adults as actors. Another goal, she said, is to do some plays that appeal to families.

Members say that involving children attracts a wider audience because parents, grandparents, and other relatives come to the performances.

Producing a children's play "is when you get the crowds of people" paying for tickets, said Angi Walsh, a co-president of the club in 1993-94.

"The only way (for the club) to guarantee a good audience is by doing 'kiddee shows,'" Heineman said.

Rota said, "It is really not feasible to do just straight theater. You can be aesthetically pure and go down the tubes" due to financial losses.

From left, Isobel Grassie, Paul Dussossoit and an unidentified third actor star in "An Inspector Calls," a play written by J. B. Priestley. The Cohasset Dramatic Club (CDC) production, directed by Marie Jack, was performed at Cohasset Town Hall on Feb. 15 & 16, 1952. Today the CDC, in its 75th year, is trying to find a balance between classics and more popular shows in an effort to boost attendance and bring in more revenue.

In the past, the club has given "wonderful shows to very small audiences," which was discouraging to both the actors and the club treasurer, she said.

Peggy Corrigan, who was a member of the club's board of directors during the early 1990s, said the club used to do some "esoteric" plays that had "limited audiences."

Rota said the club's new policy has resulted in a theatrical season last year in which all productions were profitable. One of those productions was "Annie," which had an all-children cast and which was the first musical the club has done in several years.

'We jumped in and did a giant musical, and it was a wonderful success," she said, adding that it had a sold-out audience.

"We're in a growth phase now," Rota said.

The success of "Annie" has prompted the board to schedule another musical this year, "Anne of Green Gables," she said.

This fall, there will also be a children's Halloween show, "Creeps by Night." In addition, the season will feature an extended run of the Dickens classic, "A Christmas Carol," as well as "Blythe Spirit."

Lately, the club has had difficulty casting plays with men, Heineman said.

"Suburban men are working longer hours and don't have time to give to a dramatic production," he said.

In return for using the Town Hall auditorium, the club makes a donation to the town to cover heat, maintenance and other costs, Rota said. This year, the club will pay the town $700, she said.

Rota said the club may try to sell ads for the individual programs this year.

Recycling is on the upswing, officials say upward trend in price won't be as steep as it has been, he said.

Much of the increasing demand for corrugated cardboard comes from the Far East, said Tracy, who is also a project director at Northeast Recycling Associates of Hingham, which recycles office paper.

Demand for consumer goods, such as television sets, is growing in developing countries in the Far East, and recycled corrugated cardboard is used to make packaging for those goods, he said.

Demand for recycled newspapers has been fueled by improvements in the deinking process, said Paul Mahoney, general manager of the printing division at the Mariner Newspapers.

Newsprint made from recycled newspapers now is "a very acceptable sheet to run" on a newspaper printing press, he said.

Also fueling the demand for used newspapers has been "a shortage of virgin pulp" from trees, which is used to manufacture newsprint. The shortage has escalated over the years as environmentalists have pressured governments to restrict the number of trees that can be cut down, he said.

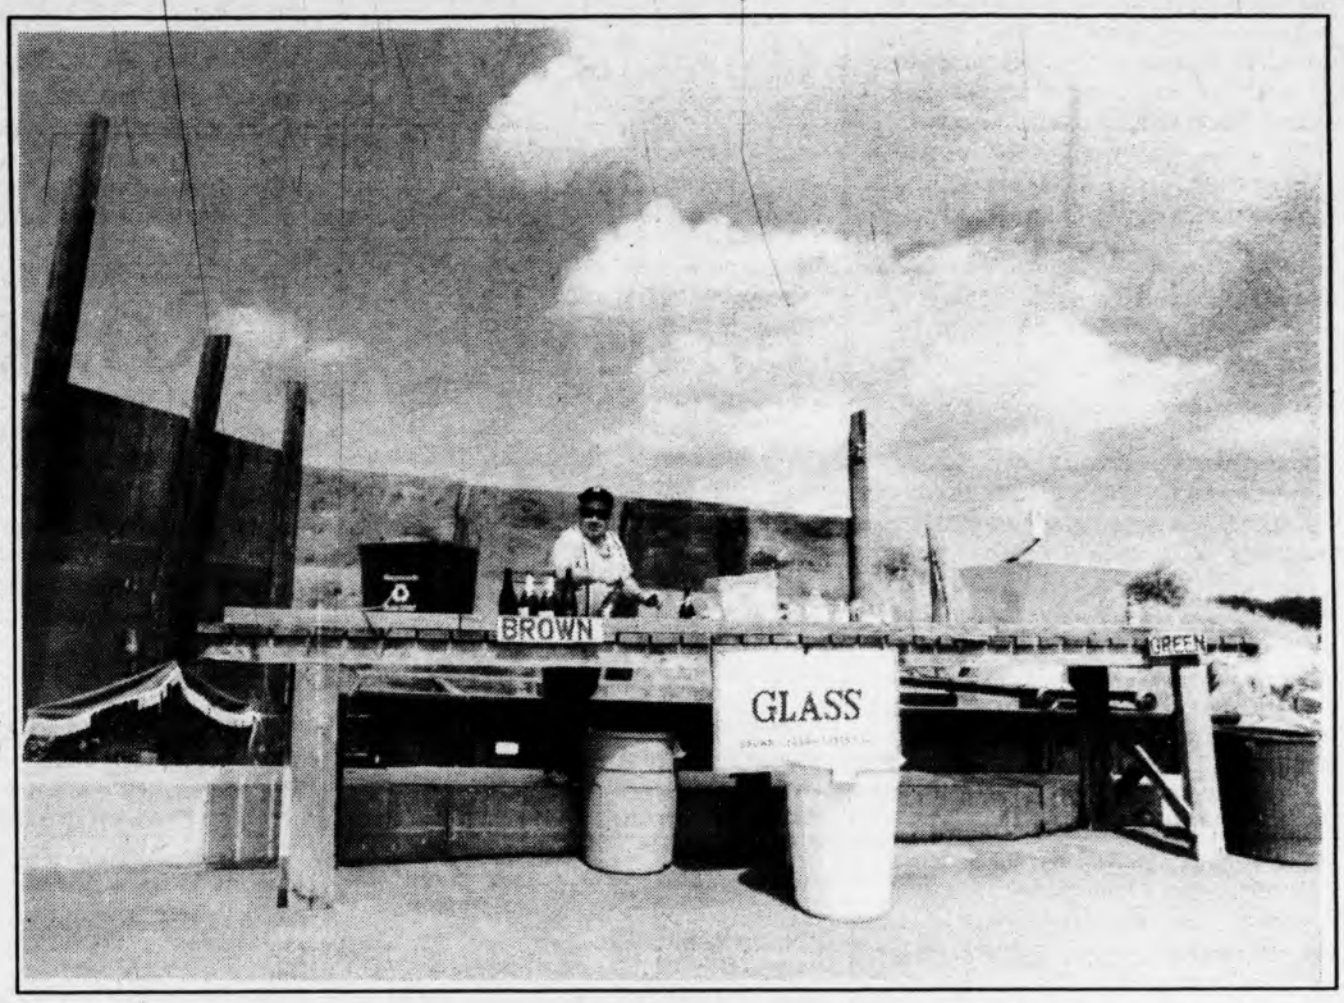
In addition, over the last 10 years, almost all newsprint manufacturers have been required by the U.S. and Canadian governments to manufacture some of their newsprint from recycled fiber, he said.

The demand for recycled plastic has increased because companies are finding more uses for it, Lehr said.

"More and more companies are gearing up to use recycled plastic," he said.

Newspaper, corrugated cardboard, and plastic containers are sold to North Shore Recycled Fibers Corp. of Salem, who provide "good service" and "competitive prices," Lehr said.

The town had contracted with them because no other company was interested in the contract, he said.



John Barnes works on the recycling table at the Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF). Glass is just one of several recyclables at the RTF which is bringing in cash for the town and reducing the tonnage shipped to SEMASS. (Staff photo/ Alan Chapman)

The town has also started to recycle white office paper separately at the RTF.. The recycling of office paper is geared toward local businesses, Lehr said.

Environmentally conscious consumers are seeking paper products with recycled content, and demand for those products is rising by 6 to 7 percent a year, Tracy said.

In addition, the town has begun to recycle computer paper, Lehr said.

PAINT TO BE RECYCLED

The town is also constructing a 10-by-16 foot building at the RTF for the recycling of paint, he said. Cans of used or surplus paint will be collected at the facility, he said. Members of the community seeking paint will be able to pick out the cans of paint they want and take them away, he said.

Both latex and oil-based paint will be accepted, he said. Lehr hopes the facility was slated to be completed this week. The town plans to open the facility once a month to the public for receiving and distributing paint, he said. The construction of the facility is being funded by a grant of about $4,000 from the state Department of Environmental Protection, Lehr said. Paint will be accepted from homeowners only, he said.

Proceeds from the sale of recyclables from the RTF are placed in the town's general fund, Brown said.

Join Ellen Rose's team

Sunday, Sept. 10, Cara, Bree and Maura McKenney will join families and friends participating in the Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk. The McKenney girls, ages 11, 13, and 15 will be walking with, and in behalf of their seven-year-old cousin, Ellen Rose O'Brien of Melrose.

Ellen Rose has battled a brain tumor since her fifth birthday. Last year she joined her cousins and friends on "Ellen Rose's Team" and made the trek along the Boston Marathon Route completing the last 13 miles from Wellesley to Boston.

This year Ellen is eagerly awaiting the walk and has designed the logo for her "team" T-shirt to include her beloved teddy bear, Victoria. Ron Goodwin of Goodwin Graphics in Cohasset donated the printing, and Ellen Rose's team is ready to walk!

The McKenney sisters invited anyone to join them on the walk. They've arranged for a van to transport walkers from Boston to their start in Wellesley. The Jimmy Fund asks that each member of a team collect a minimum of $100 in pledges. Last year 5,000 walkers raised nearly $1.5 million for cancer research and treatment at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute.

If you would like to make a donation, please make checks payable to The Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk and send them to: The McKenneys, 45 Spring St., Cohasset 02025. Your donation will sponsor a team member and help us all to be part of the cure.

F. Noel Edwards

F. Noel Edwards

Frederick Noel Edwards, 89, of Cohasset, a firefighter for many years and an Army veteran of World War II, died Sunday at the Norwell Knoll Nursing Home where he had resided for the past two years.

Noel, born on Christmas day, came from England as a young child, along with his brothers Ernie, Victor and sister Eileen. His father, an English gardener, was superintendent of the Jerusalem Road estate, Stoneleigh.

Noel was educated in the Cohasset schools, and became a firefighter of distinction and a part-time painter. His hobby was gardening. When he married Ethel (Walsh) Strain nearly 40 years ago, he made her little home at 344 King Street a show place. Few could grow flowers or vegetables better than he.

Mr. Edwards served in North Africa during the war and was a member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and American Legion posts in Cohasset.

Husband of the late Ethel (Walsh) Edwards, he leaves a sister, Eileen Shuebruk of New York; and many nieces and nephews, including his wife's niece, Nancy Saumsiegle, of Wellesley.

A funeral service was conducted Tuesday at 11 a.m. at the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset, by the Rev. Gary Ritts of Second Congregational Church. Burial was at Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Donations may be made to Firemen's Benefit Assn. or Firemen's Local Fund, c/o Cohasset Fire Dept., 44 Elm St., Cohasset, 02025.

Back to School!

The days are getting shorter and the nights feel distinctly cooler as September looms.

Suddenly it makes sense to wear long pants at night and maybe even carry a lightweight sweater over your arm. Before you know it we'll be turning on the central heating for good, bundling up in sweaters and watching the Patriots on Sunday afternoons.

But don't be deceived by the gentle change of the seasons, the happy chirping of crickets on your doorstep and the goldenrod nodding in the fields. Within a week the peace and quiet of Indian Summer will be shattered by the roar of school buses and battles over homework and talking on the phone.

As every parent knows, Labor Day signals an end to the freedom of summer and the start of another school year fraught with the challenges of bringing up kids.

Challenges like whether it's a good idea to give in and buy the wildly expensive, trendy backpack for carrying school books (try $40 plus) or hold out for the more cost effective, all purpose duffel bag.

Parents of younger children go to war over lunch boxes. This year the trend is toward Pocahontas but parents who have been at this for a while will recall searching high and low for Cabbage Patch and Dukes of Hazard lunch boxes.

And then there are the infinite choices in note pads, pens and pencils. Kids today won't settle for the old-fashioned pencil box. They want academic organizers that would do any Fortune 500 company executive proud.

Remember the No. 2 pencil? Well, forget about it. Most teachers past grade school level want homework completed with an erasable pen. What do you know, they come in red, black and blue ink. Save your sanity - buy them all.

Time's running out. Have you stocked up on cold medicine - both decongestant and cough suppressant? It's a known fact that almost every child comes down with a humdinger of a head cold within the first three weeks of school. It's guaranteed to make everyone in the family feel equally miserable and no one, repeat, no one, manages to get a good night's sleep.

And what about breakfast foods? This can turn into a very big deal, especially if you have more than one child.

Strive for an assortment of every kind of easy to make breakfast food imaginable. This will cut down on early morning stress and leave parents with the illusion that they're sending their kids off to school with a nutritious start to the day.

Remember - Labor Day weekend will see a rush on juice boxes so better get to the supermarket early for the best choice. We're talking Friday because school starts on Wednesday. God forbid '90's kids should drink out of a Thermos even if it has Pocahontas on the front.

The first day of school brings other nightmares for parents like whether short shorts and pink hair are allowed. "Absolutely, Mom." What about fingernails painted blue and nose rings? "No problem." Will anyone notice and call you a bad parent? You bet!

Next to Christmas, Back to School ranks right up there on the stress-o-meter for parents — way more stressful than summer vacation and 10 uninterrupted weeks with your kids.

Plan for Hagerty site objected to (Editor's note: A copy of the following letter to selectmen was sent to the Mariner for publication).

Dear Selectpersons:

The Hagerty Plan fails miserably when considered in the greater context of Government Island, the Harbor, and Cohasset's overburdened taxpayers.

The CLC was requested and agreed to support the property acquisition because the Town should control as much oceanfront property as possible. Many of us realized the price was not a bargain. The "carrot" of donations (ultimately 50+50=$100K) and the possibility of selling the Showroom to reduce the price were persuasive to many voters.

To date, you have spent a substantial portion of the $100K and the "Plan" will cost as much as $160-200K without boat slips! You're now pushing $750,000!

Max Pounder asked for guidance on three issues (I will add a fourth):

A/ The House: Tear it down. Nonprofits are uninterested in it, it hasn't been rented despite a six month effort. The Town shouldn't manage anymore real property than absolutely essential. It occupies badly needed uplands.

B/ The Cutting Room: Keep it. The exterior can be made attractive at minimal cost. The Town and fishermen need a contingency should the Mill Wharf be sold. It's an ideal facility for the Harbormaster.

C/ Parking: Totally inadequate. The Plan proposes a net of only 25 spaces (four existing spaces being eliminated). When you subtract the six trailer/one live trailer & handicapped space, you may have only 10 spaces available for cars. Discussion centered around historical usage, whereas, it should focus on projected usage once slips are available and the Rowing Club becomes active. If you send trailers to the Ed Young Lot (which only has about 32 spaces) you create problems for functions at Bancroft Hall and double the traffic on Parker Avenue.

D/ Beautification: First priority should be given to beautifying Government Island where thousands of residents go from the Ed Young Lot to Bancroft Hall, the templates, and replica and enjoy the vista of the Harbor and Atlantic Ocean. The slope between the Keepers' House and the Replica as well as general maintenance of the Border Street entrance and Templates area are needed.

Selectman Michael H. Sullivan expressed concern that the CLC was "overcommercializing" the Keepers' Residence. Mike, you're totally wrong. Some people have short memories of the historic residence being on the verge of being condemned, ill-conceived Town money articles and low-ball rental rates. The property was privatized and community service organizations such as the Rotary Club, VFW, Volunteer Firefighters and many other groups needed a home base. I used to go out to the Ed Young Lot and pick-up trash bags of empty liquor bottles, condoms, undergarments, etc. Although not totally resolved, I strongly suspect that Border Street and Parker Avenue residents experience less nighttime noise from youths partying on Beacon Rock and (knock on wood) we've had less graffiti.

Mike, when the ribbon was cut May 15, we were $85,000 in debt (personal loan guarantees). Since that time, we have reduced our indebtedness to about $30,000 while partially equipping the kitchen, buying tables/chairs, installing air conditioning, improving some landscaping, installing exterior and Ed Young Lot lighting, drapes, the Plankowners' wall, and a granite post safety barrier. We turned over the premises for Harborfest weekend and will close for two weeks during January 1996 for annual maintenance (does the Town give that type of priority to maintenance?). All of the above has cost about $500,000 at no taxpayer expense.

Please look at the list of free community service meetings that have been held at the Bancroft Hall; approximately 150. About 100 user fee functions have been scheduled in the first 18 months and they are very special occasions for those involved. Combined, about 10,000 people will have enjoyed Bancroft Hall.

I request that the CLC be advised when the Hagerty Plan will be further considered by your Board.

Lower speed limit is needed

To the Editor:

With all due respect to Selectwoman Jane Goedecke, I must take strong exception to her comment, in discussing the request by residents of Jerusalem Rd. to reduce the speed limit, that, "Thirty miles per hour is perfectly acceptable." Ms. Goedecke certainly is entitled to her opinion, but unless she either is qualified or has some expertise in the area of speed and traffic safety, I submit that her opinion, absent an updated survey by the state (it was last done 20 years ago), is worthless — and certainly should not be the final word on this matter.

I regularly run and walk on Jerusalem Road, often with a dog and/or a baby carriage. I honestly can say that it is one of the most dangerous roadways for pedestrians I ever have encountered. I routinely criss-

Title V blamed in part for sinking real estate market

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

Tough new rules governing septic systems and a rise in interest rates last spring are being blamed for a substantial dip in home sales on the South Shore over the past several months.

Sales of single family homes dropped by more than 20 percent during the second quarter of the year over the same period a year ago.

"They (sales) are showing quite a decline in this area," reported Marilyn Moran, vice president of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors in Pembroke, which tabulates figures from 14 towns.

"We can't say all of the decline is due to Title V," she said, blaming sluggish economic conditions as well.

The association this week released figures from Banker & Tradesman reporting a 12 percent decline for the first half of the year, versus the first six months of 1994.

The figures, which are taken from the Registry of Deeds, include all home sales, including those made by sellers or within families. These figures indicate that 1,903 single family homes changed hands during the first six months of 1995, down from 2,170 for the first half of 1994.

The Massachusetts Association of Realtors, in Waltham, reports a more than 21 percent drop for the first six months of 1995. However, its figures include only properties sold through the Multiple Listing Service of the real estate industry.

These figures show that 1,277 residential houses were sold in 1995, compared with 1,627 in 1994.

However, realtors also say that since Title V was relaxed Aug. 2, a rebound in the market can expected.

Title V went into effect in April and statewide housing sales that month took a nose dive, dropping 37.5 percent over April, 1994, according to the Massachusetts Association of Realtors.

During the second quarter, sales of single family, detached houses fell by 20 percent statewide.

On the South Shore, the drop was slightly greater, just under 24 percent.

John Dulczewski, communications director at the association, conceded that while other factors likely contributed to the decline, Title V is the single biggest cause.

"This is clearly the most significant outside variable," he said, adding that interest rates, consumer confidence and unemployment are considered "inside variables. Those are the typical things we deal with from quarter to quarter."

Dulczewski explained that housing sales usually start to pick up in the spring following the winter slump.

He said it will be hard to estimate the full impact of Title V however, because some homeowners were reluctant to place their properties on the market if they feared the septic system might not pass. Any failed system, even if the house were taken off the market, had to be fixed within a year under the original Title V rules. Now homeowners have two years to make repairs.

Donna Brooks O'Neil, owner of Preferred Properties in Norwell, and past president of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors, has blamed Title V for a shortage of houses older houses in the $200,000 price range. She believes that fear of failure, caused by inflexible rules, simply took many properties off the market.

She agreed that changes in Title V will likely bring some of those properties to the market.

Penny Locke, owner of Lucy Locke Gallery 360, said that business is down as much as 30 percent in Scituate, Cohasset and Marshfield, towns which have been heavily affected by Title V. In other areas, business is down 25 percent, she stated.

In addition, she said that there are not enough houses for sale in all price ranges.

Locke said concern over Title V rules is certainly a significant factor, and that the the economy has not helped sales.

She pointed out, however, that the implementation of Title V in April coincided with Federal Reserve Board action which hiked interest rates over nine percent.

"I blame the overall economy more than I blame Title V," she said. "Title V is not the whole problem, but it didn't help."

Locke anticipates a strong home sales in the fall, partly because of the Weld administration's decision to relax Title V and to a drop in interest rates and other economic news.

The Title V provision requiring all septic systems near water bodies to be failed was a particular problem, Locke said. She predicted that the revised rules, which only fail systems which actually do not work, will result in more waterfront property on the market.

The decline in the number of houses for sale may have partly contributed to a rise in prices. The MAR reports that the average house on the South Shore sold for over $181,000 in 1995, up 9 percent from the first half of 1994, when the average selling price was $166,000.

Away from the coast, Title V rules have not been an issue. In Rockland, Robert Ahern, vice president of Hatherly Realty, explained that with 90 of the town on sewer lines, he has had only one potential sale involve a failed septic system.

In other greater Brockton towns the story is the same. Nearly half of Abington is on sewer lines, while Holbrook, Randolph, Canton, Stoughton, Braintree and Weymouth are all have sewer service through the MWRA. Few houses in those areas have private septic systems.

'Kids' movie is not geared for them

letters

To the Editor:

Kids all over the world should be offended and outraged. The new movie, ironically called "Kids," will not be viewed, in theaters, by anyone under 18. That's right, kids can't see "Kids."

If you're 18, you're legally an adult. If you're under 18 you're legally a kid. I don't care if you're 17 and a half, you're still legally a kid. When you're 18, you can drive, vote, and die for your country. You're definitely not a kid anymore.

Kids can't even see "Kids" with an adult. Even if you have both your parents with you, you're not getting in.

So how come adults are the only ones who can see a movie about kids? I really don't know. Supposedly, this film is a controversial documentary. Wait? It's a documentary? But, the definition of a documentary is: a book or film presenting facts objectively without editorializing or inserting fictional matter.

So this is a true movie about kids. Yet, kids can't see it. If it's true, it probably deals with issues facing real "kids" today. We probably go through the same stuff that the kids in the movie go through. The movie "Kids" is basically an up close look at our lives. But, we shouldn't see it, 'cause we might be influenced by ourselves. It would be bad if we knew what was going on in our lives. We wouldn't want to see a movie we could really relate to. 'Cause you know, we have nothing in common with "Kids." Sure.

Lower speed limit is needed

cross the street before reaching the many blind corners in order to avoid the prospect of cars whizzing past me by a matter of inches. There are many other roads in town, with sidewalks and safer conditions, which are posted at 30 m.p.h. It is illogical to suggest that 30 m.p.h. can be acceptable anywhere on Jerusalem Rd., which for its entire length has no sidewalks for pedestrians and whose safety is compromised by numerous twists and turns in the road which are obscured by the shrubbery of homeowners who are allowed to keep them 10 feet tall.

Slower speed limits not only would benefit pedestrians, but they also would help to slow down unsuspecting motorists who are not aware that the road ahead may hold pedestrians who are walking or bicycling, oftentimes in the middle of the street.

But the most galling aspect of the selectmen's "discussion" of the petition is that not one of the petitioners was notified that the selectmen were going to take up the issue at their meeting August 21. In my many years of dealing with town and city governments in other municipalities (I have lived in Cohasset since last November), an elective body never has taken up — and rejected out of hand — a citizen petition without at least hearing from the petitioners who, after all, supposedly are represented by the board members.

Bill Weld and Newt Gingrich talk of devolving governmental authority as much as possible to the local level. I suggest that with the sort of cavalier treatment the petitioners received from our local elected officials who are our supposed "neighbors," we would be better off dealing with a faceless bureaucrat on Beacon Hill on this issue.

Speaking for myself, I request that the selectmen hold a public hearing with the petitioners and address this issue with the seriousness it deserves instead of the "off-hand" opinions rendered by Selectwoman Goedecke and her colleagues. The selectmen were so eager to dispose of this matter that they failed to mention the report done 20 years ago, which set the speed limits all along Jerusalem Rd. The selectmen should discuss that report, insist that the speed limit signs be posted in accordance with it, and determine what can be done (lowering the speed limit where necessary, enforcing the speed limit, and cutting shrubbery at corners) to make Jerusalem Rd. something less than Cohasset's version of Monte Carlo.

School committee retreats on school vacation policy

New town survey contradicts earlier poll

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

In the wake of fierce of public protest, the school committee last week altered the school vacation policy adopted almost a year ago.

The committee agreed that for the upcoming school year, students will receive a one-week vacation in March, as voted last November.

They said it would inconvenience too many people to change back at this late date.

However, because Cohasset appears to be one of only a few public school systems in Massachusetts with a March vacation, the school committee will petition the state department of education to set a uniform spring vacation, "that maximizes educational effectiveness," according to supt. Stephen Hart.

If the state does not establish a uniform vacation, then the school committee will revert to the original policy, with two vacations, in February and April, each one week long.

The vote came largely in response to the unpopularity of the March vacation policy among parents, teachers and students. The March vacation eliminated one week of vacation, but did not change the number of days school is in session.

In making his recommendation Hart reported that parents do not want the March vacation.

He said that 63 percent, 280 households, responding to a survey on the matter last summer wanted to return to the February and April vacation schedule.

Thirty-six percent, 159 households, favored the March vacation.

Of 774 surveys mailed, 442, or 57 percent were returned.

These survey results contradict an earlier poll taken by the PTO, which reported that parents favor the new policy by a two to one margin.

The teacher's association last year voted against the March vacation, 67 to 27 percent, while students appeared almost unanimously to oppose the new policy.

Hart reiterated that the vacation change was not made for political, but for educational reasons.

The March vacation was established to create longer blocks of time for learning. For instance, during the last school year, only 13 weeks contained five full school days out of a total of 36 weeks.

One March vacation "still makes sense to have longer educational blocks," Hart said, adding that "It certainly wasn't a political decision."

'It certainly wasn't a political decision.'

— Supt. Stephen Hart on the single March vacation decision.

But Hart went on to say that it will be "very difficult if not impossible to maintain a separate vacation."

The survey results also indicated that switching to the traditional schedule now, as the school year is set to begin, would inconvenience many people.

Hart said that 108 survey respondents, 24 percent, indicated that changing the vacation now would cause great or moderate inconvenience. Some parents have already made vacation plans for March, which they cannot change now.

A number of parents at the meeting remained unsatisfied with the school committee vote, stating that the vacation change should never have been made in the first place.

Several people said they did not know what was going on and were surprised to learn of the vacation change.

Hart, school committee members and several parents rebutted the argument that the decision was made in secret.

The vacation change was periodically discussed at school committee meetings for nearly two years. A subcommittee was formed to study the matter. These discussions appeared periodically in the Mariner.

The May 5, 1994 edition of the Mariner carried a long story on the issue and the vote to change the policy appeared on the front page of the Nov. 10, 1994 issue.

Parents were also asked what they thought of the change via the school lunch menu.

Some parents at the meeting said they do not read the local paper and did not get the school lunch menus.

"As a community, we've really been kept in the dark here," said one man.

Several people called for parent surveys whenever major decisions were being made.

School committee member Nancy Sandell said this was impractical and suggested that parents come to more school committee meetings, which do not usually have more than one or two parents in attendance.

"I don't think we're going to take a poll every time we make a decision," said school committee member Joanne Chittick.

School committee chairman Ralph Kidder said that the school department does the best job that it can to inform parents.

"The committee a good faith decision to get the word out," he said. "Those people who did read the Mariner, who did follow this closely," knew the change was under consideration.

Some parents said they did know what was going on, even if they hadn't necessarily liked the March vacation.

"I felt very well informed through the process," said JoAnn Pilczak, a parent. "Everybody I know knew what was going on."

"Nothing was done secretively," said parent Ann Whiteley. "It was due process, it was fair. I'll abide by the decision but I never liked it. I felt hurt (by the school committee vote for a March vacation), but I was informed."

Another parent, Alison Ullmer, also saw the Mariner articles and also told the school committee she favored the traditional vacation schedule. She said that when she called school committee members to discuss it, she was thanked for her input.

Ullmer said that many people doubted the vacation would ever actually be changed.

Betsy Connolly, of the junior/senior high school parent council, said she knew of the proposed change, but pointed out that the parent councils never endorsed the idea.

She also reminded the meeting that an alternative proposal calling for classes to start the week before Labor Day had been more popular with parents than a March vacation.

When another parent, Rob Spofford, wanted to know what the penalty would be for parents who withdrew their children during the traditional February vacation to go skiing.

Sandell and school committee member Maureen Jerz quickly told him that the school department does not endorse the removal of children from class for non-academic reasons.

Connolly said that such absences violate the school attendance policy. She said that it would cause added burden on teachers who have to give make-up exams and extra assignments for missed work.

Kidder said that on days before and after a vacation, absences are up.

The school committee members unanimously defended their vote in favor of a March vacation.

"There's not much need to beat a dead horse," Jerz said. "The educational benefits were looked at."

Chittick said "I agree it's obviously not sensible to be the only ones having a vacation at an odd time," but she went on to say that she favored the educational reasons for a change.

"We're first and foremost the advocates of the children in this community," stated Sandell. "The American educational system needs to be strengthened."

School committee member James Kirk was absent.

Cohasset business

Specialty coffee shop opens with Latin fanfare

By David Johnson
Mariner correspondent

It is a long and difficult journey from the spectacular Andes mountains of Colombia to the craggy beaches of Cohasset. And Juan Valdez, that premier symbol of Colombia's most famous export, coffee, cannot claim to have made the tortuous journey entirely on horseback.

However, Valdez and his trusty pack pony, Java, did plod into town this week to celebrate the opening of a new coffee shop.

A Quik'ava shop has opened at VERC Mobil Cohasset, 190 King St., selling various specialty coffees and sandwiches at a take-out window.

According to manager Cheryl Wright, the store will sell homemade bagels, muffins, cookies and scones, along with flavored gourmet coffees and teas.

Since Hingham-based Quik'ava is owned by Choc Full O' Nuts, the Choc Classic, a sandwich made with date and nut bread and walnut cream cheese, will also be sold.

Paul Vercollone of Marshfield and his brother Leo, own the station, which is one of six gas stations and two car washes in their South Shore chain.

Vercollone will also own the Quik'ava franchise and plans to open an additional six franchises throughout the South Shore in coming years.

Cohasset is the only site where a coffee franchise will be attached to a gas station.

"We were looking to get into a new business," Vercollone explained, "and we see the coffee business exploding, especially specialty coffee. We thought it (Quik'ava) would be a good company to be involved with."

He said the combination of speed service and the variety of fancy flavored coffees would make the franchise popular with commuters heading up Rte. 3A toward Boston.

"We're really excited," he said. "This is the way to grow our company."

At its June 7 meeting the planning board gave the go-ahead for the drive through. The station already sold coffee and newspapers from a small store.

The original plan for the gas station was approved in January, 1989. Two months later Vercollone applied to the ZBA for a variance to add a retail store. The variance was granted with restrictions on the type of items which could be sold. Vercollone sued and Norfolk Superior Court overturned the restrictions in Dec. 1993.

There are now six Quik'ava outlets, including those in Marshfield, Hanover, Norwell, Weymouth and on Rte. 9 in Natick. Vercollone reported that other franchises are due to open in Manchester, New Hampshire and Providence, Rhode Island.

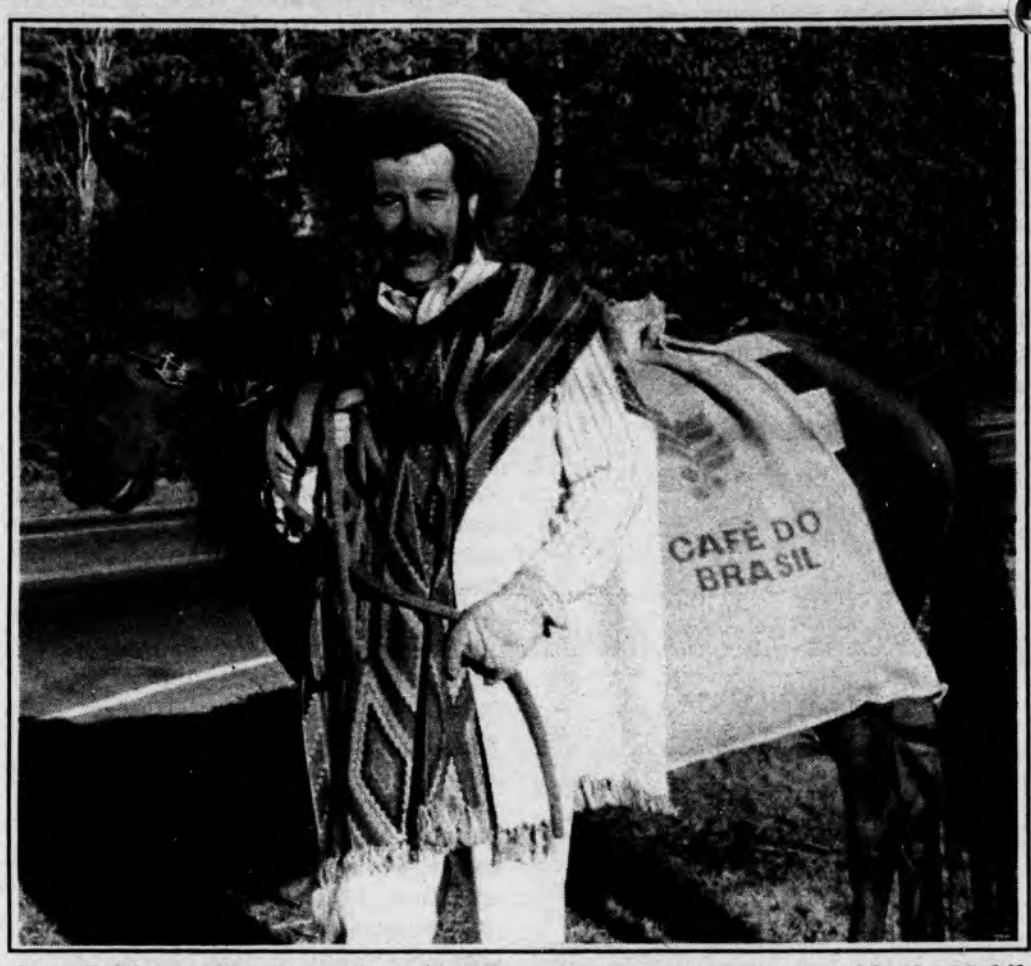
Although the store opened at the end of last week, Wright said a full fledged grand opening is planned for September. This will include children's events and an appearance by the Quik'ava race car, which placed third in the recent Boston grand prix.

Vercollone said that business has been rather slow, but steady.

"Our challenge is to let the company know we're here," he said.

That has been the job of Valdez, who has been patiently waving to passing motorists, many of whom have honked back at him or turned in to try his coffee.

After his appearance in Cohasset, Valdez got back into the saddle and he and Java headed off to yet another spot in pursuit of his goal - a cup of Colombian coffee in every hand.



Juan Valdez and his horse Java made a surprise appearance outside the Mobil Station off Rte. 3A this week. A Quik'ava drive through has just opened at the gas station. (Mary Ford photo)

P.A.C. meeting slated

The Parents Advisory Council of Cohasset invites all parents and guardians of students receiving services under Chapter 766 from the Cohasset School System to its first meeting of the school year to be held Tuesday, Sept. 5, at 7:30 p.m. in the Deer Hill School library. The guest speaker will be Alicia Shea, director of student services of the Cohasset school system.

For further details call P.A.C. co-chairs Ann Whiteley at 383-9310, or JoAnn Pilczak at 383-0268.

Walking tours are planned

The Cohasset Historical Commission will present two walking tours of Cohasset's most historic areas. On Sunday, Sept. 17, the 1995 "Harborwalk" will tour the town's maritime area, once the site of a thriving shipbuilding and fishing industry. Altogether, Cohasset's maritime industry provided work for the majority of the town's working people during the "age of the sail." Shipbuilding began at "Ship Cove," now Cohasset harbor, in the early 1700s and continued until the late 19th century.

On Sunday, Oct. 1, a walking tour of historic Cohasset Common and the village center is planned.

On both tours some of the finest examples of early architecture in the town may be seen. Both tours will meet at the Historical Society's Maritime Museum, Cohasset Center, at 2 p.m. on the scheduled days, and the Society's curator will conduct both walks. There is no charge for the tours, but donations at the museum are welcome.

Wellness expo Sept. 23

The South Shore Community Center and the Cohasset Council on Aging will jointly sponsor a Health, Wellness and Leisure Expo Saturday, Sept. 23, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the South Shore Community Center, 3 North Main Street in Cohasset.

The Expo will include exhibitors from health and leisure-related companies; demonstrations of Tai Chi, aerobics and gymnastics; presentations about registration, helmet safety and fingerprinting children by the Cohasset Police Department.

Refreshments will include food-tasting sponsored by the Cohasset Gourmet Club.

The popular tambourine group, "Karolyn and Kompany" will be on hand to entertain. Balloons and icecream will be available for children. Admission is free.

Interested exhibitors should call the South Shore Community Center at 383-0088 for further information.

Blood drive slated

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, Sept. 13. The Red Cross Bloodmobile will be at the Unitarian Parish House at 23 North Main Street from 2 to 7 p.m. As in the past, babysitting assistance will be provided after 3 p.m.

The Red Cross has experienced a slight decrease in blood donations this summer despite the usual increased need for blood during these months. Cohasset's own Blood Drive in May was much lower than in January, dropping to 88 accepted donors from a prior level of 113.

To make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, please call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290.

Junior Voices to start

Junior Voices, the children's chorus for South Shore singers grades 4-8, will be starting after Labor Day; parents should register their children this week and next, by calling the director at 749-6561. JV's meets in So. Hingham at Wilder Hall on Tuesday afternoons from 4 to 5:15 p.m.

The group performs classical and Broadway arrangements for treble voices, and a great emphasis is placed on learning to read music. Children must have a strong love of singing, good attention span, and be able to match pitches accurately; there is no solo audition. Junior Voices performs frequently throughout the season, and children are expected to attend class regularly.

The program is sponsored by the Broad Cove Chorale, a Hingham-based chorus for women, and is directed by Margo Euler. Please call 749-6561 for more information.

Piano lessons are offered

Priscilla D. Daniels, professional pianist and teacher of pianoforte, will resume her lesson schedule at her Beach Street home in Cohasset. Her personalized instruction has attracted students who have had careers in music, while others play just for pleasure.

Mrs. Daniels is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music of Boston, magna cum laude and is a member of Alpha Chi Omega, national sorority, and Pi Kappa Lambda, honorary professional society. She has taught in Swampscott, Lincoln, Norwood, and currently in Cohasset.

As part of each lesson she incorporates music theory, harmony, rhythm study and expression. She encourages her students to improvise and compose, and strives to communicate a love and appreciation for the fine arts through the medium of the piano. For further information, call 383-1487.

School night for Scouting

The Old Colony Council, Boy Scouts of America, in cooperation with public school systems in the 41 cities and towns served by the Council, will hold a School Night for Scouting program between Tuesday, Sept. 18, and Friday, Sept. 22.

Talbert E. Lauter, of Hingham, council vice president for membership, said that local Cub Pack and Boy Scout Troop leaders have been notifying Scout Headquarters where and when the school night program will be held in their community. At the same time, Lauter said that recruitment flyers will be distributed through schools in order to notify parents and prospective members of actual times and dates.

"Cub Scouting is a home and neighborhood centered program for boys from the first through fourth grades (ages 6 through 10). Boys from age 11 upward, or who have completed the fifth grade, are good prospects for the Boy Scout program. Scouting instills values that help young people to make sound, ethically based decisions throughout their lifetimes. That gives them confidence as they become the leaders of the future," Lauter said.

He also pointed out that there is a place for parents in Scouting, too.

"Our programs operate through volunteer leadership, and parents are a natural source of volunteers for all Scouting programs," Lauter said.

For further information about School Night for Scouting and location of a nearby school participating in the program, parents are urged to call Scout Headquarters in Canton at 617-828-8360.

Dealers are wanted to participate in a flea market/craft show benefiting the Beechwood Congregational Church of Cohasset, to be held Sept. 23. Table space will cost $10. The show will be held rain or shine. Free parking and a snack bar will be available.

Please call C. Kristiansen at (617) 383-0070.

Lunch with Laroche slated

Acclaimed speaker, educator and humorist Loretta LaRoche will present a special keynote speech, "How to Prevent Hardening of the Attitude" Thursday, Sept. 14, at the Chart House in Cohasset. The luncheon event will benefit the South Shore Community Center and the Cohasset Council on Aging.

LaRoche teaches workshops and seminars throughout the country and recently appeared on her own live telecast, "The Joy of Stress" on WGBH-TV. She is known for her ability to educate and motivate her audiences through laughter.

Man arrested following car chase

Hingham police arrested a 37-year-old Hyde Park man after he allegedly stole a car in Cohasset and was pursued by officers through Hingham and Weymouth before crashing the car into a police cruiser on the front lawn of a house near Cold Corner.

Hingham Police Lt. Russell Erickson said Richard Fallavollitia will be charged with larceny of a motor vehicle, larceny over $250, possession of hypodermic needles, four outstanding arrest warrants, and numerous motor vehicle offenses, including speeding, failure to stop for a police officer, and leaving the scene of an accident after causing property damage.

According to Hingham Patrolman Robert Mansfield, Cohasset police radioed the description of a black and grey 1989 Chevrolet Blazer reported stolen from a house on Chief Justice Cushing Highway, and heading into Hingham on Route 3A at 4:22 Monday afternoon.

Mansfield said he observed the car, and attempted to stop it. However, the driver refused to stop and Mansfield pursued the Blazer from the vicinity of the Hingham police station, to Bicknell Square in Weymouth, to Weymouth Heights, and back to Hingham on High Street.

At the intersection of High and Main streets, Mansfield said the Blazer hit another car near the parking lot of the South Shore Baptist Church, and continued northbound on Route 228 (Main Street) at a high rate of speed.

As the Blazer approached Cold Corner, northbound traffic was backed up as far as Arnold Road, he said, as several police cruisers converged on the suspect. The Blazer crossed into the opposite lane, and onto the front lawn of 431 Main Street, where Patrolman Thomas Greeley attempted to block its path with his cruiser.

The suspect "bailed out," Mansfield said, while the car was still in gear. The Blazer then crashed into Greeley's cruiser.

The suspect fled the scene on foot, and was pursued by officers and two K-9s in the area of Cedar Street, Butler Road, Coolidge Avenue, and Garrison Road. Fallavollitita was finally apprehended by Greeley and Patrolman Kris Phillips behind the Girl Scout House on Burr Road.

There were no reported injuries. Hingham cruiser 914 sustained damage to the front driver's side. Mansfield said the vehicle involved in the collision at the Baptist Church also sustained damage.

Cohasset police will bring the two larceny charges against Fallavollitia, who allegedly stole the car and other items from the Chief Justice Cushing Highway house where he was reportedly staying as a guest.

O'Day-Clark is ready to rumble

Skipper coach anticipates strong girls soccer season

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

The big question heading into the Cohasset High girls soccer team's season is just who is more excited to face the rest of the oh-so-tough South Shore League, the players or head coach Maureen O'Day-Clark.

"The kids are really looking forward to it," said O'Day-Clark. "But I'm excited about the season starting up to."

And just how effective will this year's large crop of juniors be in helping lead Cohasset to another visit to the Division 3 South Sectional Tourney.

The Skippers were on the field Monday for the first time under O'Day-Clark. With co-captains Jen Ripley and Katie Campbell leading the way, she worked the players through several drills designed to help her get a clearer picture of what kind of talent she'll have to work with. O'Day-Clark said she'll cut the roster from the current 36 players down to a varsity team of 18 to 20.

O'Day-Clark said the toughest competition would probably come from those teams in the SSL who have proven themselves as tournament-level squads in past seasons: Norwell, Abington and East Bridgewater. Based on the fact Cohasset beat Abington for the first time last year, O'Day-Clark has to include the Skippers in that bunch.

Confidence shouldn't be a problem for Cohasset, but O'Day-Clark knows if a team lets its guard down in the SSL there are a handful of other clubs ready to strike.

"I don't want to blow our own horn, but we should do really well," she said. "With a lot of hard work I think they'll come through."

Cohasset has scrimmage games lined up against Holbrook of the Mayflower League on Tuesday, Sept. 5 and Nauset on the following day. After the annual SSL Jamboree on Sept. 9 at Carver, the Skippers will be tested early with their home opener against Norwell (Sept. 11) and a contest at EB (Sept. 13).

Final soccer registration Sept. 9

The Cohasset Soccer Club's final registration deadline is Saturday, Sept. 9. Registration forms are available at the recreation office in town hall or call 383-1206.

The forms can be dropped off at the recreation department at town hall or mailed to: Cohasset Soccer Club, P.O. Box 409, Cohasset MA 02025.

Fall baseball openings available

There are still openings for the fall baseball program. Those interested should contact Bob Moody at (617) 383-0385 for more information.

Are you ready for some...soccer?

I know the Red Sox are in first place and the Patriots are about to kick off their regular season but for many sports fans this is the start of high school soccer season and nothing else matters.

And as it stands now, the South Shore is the high school soccer capital of the state.

Don't believe me. Well, for those who have been out in the sun too long this summer, let's review some South Shore soccer corner kicks from the '94 season.

*The Marshfield High girls' soccer team is the reigning Division I state champion after rolling through the state tourney last fall. Along the way the Lady Rams dropped powerhouses like Notre Dame Academy of Hingham, Newton North and Winchester.

*Duxbury High was double trouble last season as the boys' team won the Division II state title while the girls' team won the Division II state crown. (By the way during the regular season, the Duxbury and Marshfield girls' teams split their two games. This year's two Atlantic Coast League contests should be barn burners.)

*Sacred Heart of Kingston won the Division III girls' soccer state title.

*Archbishop Williams of Braintree reached the Division III boys' soccer state finals.

*And teams like the Silver Lake boys', the Weymouth High boys', the Hingham High boys' and girls' and the Hanover High boys' and girls' went very far in their respective state tournaments.

Not too bad for an area that used to be dominated by high school football in the fall. (Sorry all you pigskin fans. But aside from East Bridgewater in the South Shore League and Whitman-Hanson in the Atlantic Coast League, there hasn't been a dominant football program in the area for a long time.)

However, it is a new year and there will be some changes on the soccer field.

Great female players like Marshfield High's Alissa Fish, NDA's Courtney Lawson, Duxbury High's Jill Maxwell, and Norwell High's Kim Waldron all graduated. (On a down note, both Lawson and Maxwell recently suffered serious ACL injuries to their knees and their college careers will be put on hold for awhile.)

Also great male players like Silver Lake's Paul Corcoran, Scituate High's Seamus Reedy, and Hingham High's Dave DelGallo all graduated as well.

But there's no need to fear because there are many potential soccer superstars on the horizon in '95.

Hingham High has Mike Sheridan and Rich Santoro ready for strong senior seasons. Norwell High has Sara Hurley back to anchor the defense after an ankle injury ended the '94 season for her in the state tourney against Hanover. Norwell also has twin terrors Meg and Amy Barao back for their junior seasons, although the duo is more deadly on the basketball court.

Marshfield High has Tyla Brennan back in the fold for a run at a second title. Brennan already has many college scouts drooling over her post-graduation plans.

And Scituate High has Regen Steverman back to pop many goals into the net.

But the best part about soccer in this area is the strength of the coaching.

Silver Lake boys' coach Bill Johnson is considered one of the best teachers around and already has one Division I state title ('88) to his credit. It should be interesting to see what's in store for this year's Laker team.

Duxbury's Foster Cass has won numerous state titles in both soccer and basketball and is the South Shore's soccer version of John Wooden.

Marshfield High girls' coach Fred Podbelski finally got his due last season when the Lady Rams won the state crown. Coach "Pod" stresses defense, defense and more defense. Any goal scored against Marshfield is cause for a celebration by an opponent.

Hingham High has two excellent soccer coaches in boys' coach Bill Farrell and girls' coach Kristin Parnell. Farrell recorded his 100th career win last season and has consistently found a way to put together a winning team year after year.

Parnell, a former HHS standout herself, led the Harborwomen to a great Division II state tourney performance. Hingham's win over East Bridgewater was a season highlight. And soon there will be another HHS soccer fan joining the fold as Parnell is expecting a baby around the start of the season. She said she plans on coaching even with the added fan support.

Norwell High has two hard-working coaches in Bruce Emerson (girls') and John Osgood (boys') and Hanover's Garth Nelson (girls') and Jim Sylvia (boys')

Colonial Road Runners fit all needs

Welcomes runners from South Shore and beyond

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

Janet Jordan of Holbrook decided to give up smoking once and for all, but she didn't count on adding 25 pounds when she did. The 46 year old wanted to start running to lose excess weight and saw an advertisement in a newspaper about weekly fun-runs in Abington. Jordan put on her sweatpants, laced up her sneakers and showed up one Sunday afternoon.

It was probably one of the best decisions Jordan ever made.

The fun-run was held by the Colonial Road Runners, a South Shore club which currently has 65 members. Jordan remembers how welcomed she was made to feel that first run with the Colonial members.

"Everyone was so nice when I got there," Jordan said. "They kind of grabbed me and brought me into their group. I've never wanted a cigarette since I started running. It was just a great way to meet people who like to do what I liked to do."

So impressed was Jordan with the friendliness bestowed on her by people she hardly knew, she wrote a 'Thank You' note in the club newsletter, Colonial Tymes. In the note, Jordan thanked her new friends "...who made a first-year runner like me feel very welcome and part of such an enthusiastic group. I'm looking forward to my second year as a runner because the first year with Colonial was great."

Although the majority of its members hail from Brockton and Abington, Colonial welcomes runners from the entire South Shore. Taunton, Plymouth, Marshfield and Holbrook also are represented in the club. Al Donaghy, a member of the board of directors, would eventually like to see more families and younger runners join, as well as anyone else who is interested.

"We would love to get new members," he said. "It's for social reasons. We don't need the money. Because we're so varied in our abilities, there's no reason to wait to join. We'd like to see young runners. We need to bring in the young people and get them running.

The club does have a fair amount of younger runners, though the majority of members compete in the masters division. Five Colonial runners are 65 years old.

The most appealing aspect of the club is that it handles the needs of the most novice of runners right up to the road racer who regularly wins or places high up in weekly races. Each is made to feel important no matter what his or her level. And at $15 per year dues, the membership fee is lower than the majority of running clubs along the South Shore and beyond.

Jordan and Donaghy both believe runners who aren't affiliated with any club should join one. The positive aspects are numerous.

"If clubs don't sponsor road races, where would they come from" Donaghy asked.

"When you see unattached runners you think they should support a group and help keep them going," Jordan said. "The competition will disappear if you lose the clubs.

"I look forward to waking up on Saturday mornings and running with my friends."

Runs become social occasions for the members. Summer fun-runs are held from May to Sept. on Tuesday night. There are two six-week track sessions in the spring and summer on Norwell High's track. Curt Java conducts the workouts and breaks the runners into groups, based on their abilities. Workouts range from ladders to repeat 440s.

Jordan took full advantage of the workouts and wound up setting a personal-best time in the mile this summer with a 6-minute, 55-second run.

"It was the best thing thqt ever happened to me," Jordan said. "You get a lot of support from the team members."

And for those runners who want to stay sharp during the frigid winter months, fun-runs are held on Sunday afternoons at The Depot in Abington for six weeks beginning in late December.

Donaghy is the most visible member of the club and a fixture at the winter and summer fun-runs. He is the organizer of two of the club's three races, the most recent of which, the Colonial Half Marathon, is slated for Oct. 8, beginning at Abington High School. The club also sponsors the Night before the Fourth 4-miler in Abington and the Paddy Kelly 5-Mile Road Race in Brockton.

"Al is the workhorse of the club," Jordan said. "He's always there. When we finish up a race we say 'thanks Al for being here' and we mean it because he always is there."

Donaghy recently found a way to save the club $1,500 in computerized results for the three races. In the past, Colonial would hire Spitler, a company which specializes in offering its computerized timing and placing techniques at road races. With a little work at his Lotus Sorting Functions, Donaghy was able to achieve nearly the same results as Spitler.

Caljouw Cross Country and Walk Race Director Gary Edwards should consider lengthening next year's walk from 5000 meters to, oh, say, 20 miles. That depends, of course, on whether or not Hanover's Susie Alemian-DeLuca decides to bake another one of her fabulous cakes.

Alemian-DeLuca began the project the evening before. By 9 a.m. the following day, a frosted 2 foot by 6 foot cake was completed and ready to be devoured by more than 300 ravenous runners and walkers.

"When I was told about the walk about a month ago I offered my services," said the 35-year-old Alemian-DeLuca, a friend of the Caljouw family. "I told them I'd bake a cake."

"Mark was our paper boy and Tara (Mark's sister) baby-sits for us. They're such great people. We'd do anything for them."

Alemian-DeLuca didn't hold anything back when it came to ingredients. She used 35 quarts of cake batter, 4-dozen eggs, 20 quarts of frosting, 20 pounds of confectionery sugar and 6 pounds of Crisco.

Alemian-DeLuca baked the cake in four sections before frosting it. An avid walker, last Saturday's event marked the first time she has ever donned a number in competition. She said it was the cause that convinced her to sign up.

Fishing Frenzy will continue all summer

By David McKee
Mariner staff

While local anglers have been hooking record sized Striped Bass and large quantities of Blue Fish, the best fishing is yet to come, according to area experts.

"The best part of the season hasn't even started yet," said John White of J & B Tackle in Marshfield. "Usually some of the best fish are caught in the late summer and early fall when the Stripers are fatter but already this year I've heard of 48-pound Stripers being caught. There is just a lot of fish out there."

Darcy Lund, the manager of Scituate Harbor Marine, said the Striper fishing has been decent so far but she expects things to heat up.

"It has been up and down but later in the season is when the biggest fish are caught," she said. "We just had a little lull but things are starting to turn. I just caught a 36-inch, 42 pounder myself."

Lund said Stripers will eat anything if you can find them.

"Striped Bass will eat anything, seaworms, mackerel, pogies, lobster, you name it," she said. "But they are a lazy fish. They just sit and watch the bait go by so you have to know where they are."

Scituate Harbor Marine's Second Annual Striped Bass Tourney runs from Aug. 12-Aug. 27. There is a $20 registration fee and cash prizes will be given for the heaviest fish over 36 inches.

"We're looking forward to a big tournament," Lund said. "We know the catch limit is 34 inches but we want to have the tourney start at 36 inches. It should be a lot of fun."

White said recently enacted size restrictions and catch-and-release practices by fishers are why there are so many Striped Bass.

"The state put in a 36 inch restriction a few years back and that has been very successful in the growth of the Stripers," he said. "And even though it was moved to 34 inches this year, the fishers around here are pretty good about not taking smaller fish. In fact, most people practice catch-and-release anyway."

White estimated the typical Striped Bass keeper this season at 40 inches and between 30-40 pounds.

Some of the hot spots to catch Stripers on the South Shore include:

The North River, which runs from Norwell through Marshfield and into Scituate.

The South River which runs from Marshfield into Scituate.

Brant Rock in Marshfield.

Rexhame Beach in Marshfield.

Humarock Beach in Scituate.

And Duxbury Bay, Kingston Bay and Hingham Bay.

"There really isn't a bad spot for Stripers," said Shane Boston of Steve's Tackle in Marshfield. "There are fish everywhere from Boston Harbor to Cape Cod Canal. The heat has slowed things do[illegible] a little but the fishing should be g[illegible] right to the fall. I'd say on a scale from one to ten, it is about a seven right now. And it will only get better."

Stripers can be caught at any time with bait like Pogies, eels, and Mackerel.

And the age and skill level of the fisher is not that important.

"I've heard of nice fish caught at two in the afternoon and two in the morning," Boston said. "And by people of all ages and sizes. The Striper is a phenomenal eating fish and a fantastic fighter. It is the best of both worlds."

Those who keep undersize Stripers are subject to a $100 fine for a first offense. A second offense could lead to more fines and the seizure of all equipment used to catch the fish, including boats.

For more information on the Striped Bass tourney or the Shark tourney, call Lund at 545-9900.

The Grand Tour — with Ginger Ferenz, 383-2863

The gold-leaf quarter-board above the front door proclaims this to be "Carolyn's Cove." We have all watched the wonderful transformation of this home located at 84-86 Summer Street. The house is painted shell pink with white trim and a pale teal door. Mounds of pink and white Impatiens with accents of grey Dusty Miller, blue and mauve Delphinium, along with purple and pink Petunias fill the flower beds in the front yard. A clay pot stands on the front stoop filled with blue Salvia. Pink Morning Glory decorate the mailbox post. The careful choice of delicate pastel shades of flowers are the perfect accent to this meticulously renovated "doll house." Be sure to stroll by and enjoy the colors of summer.

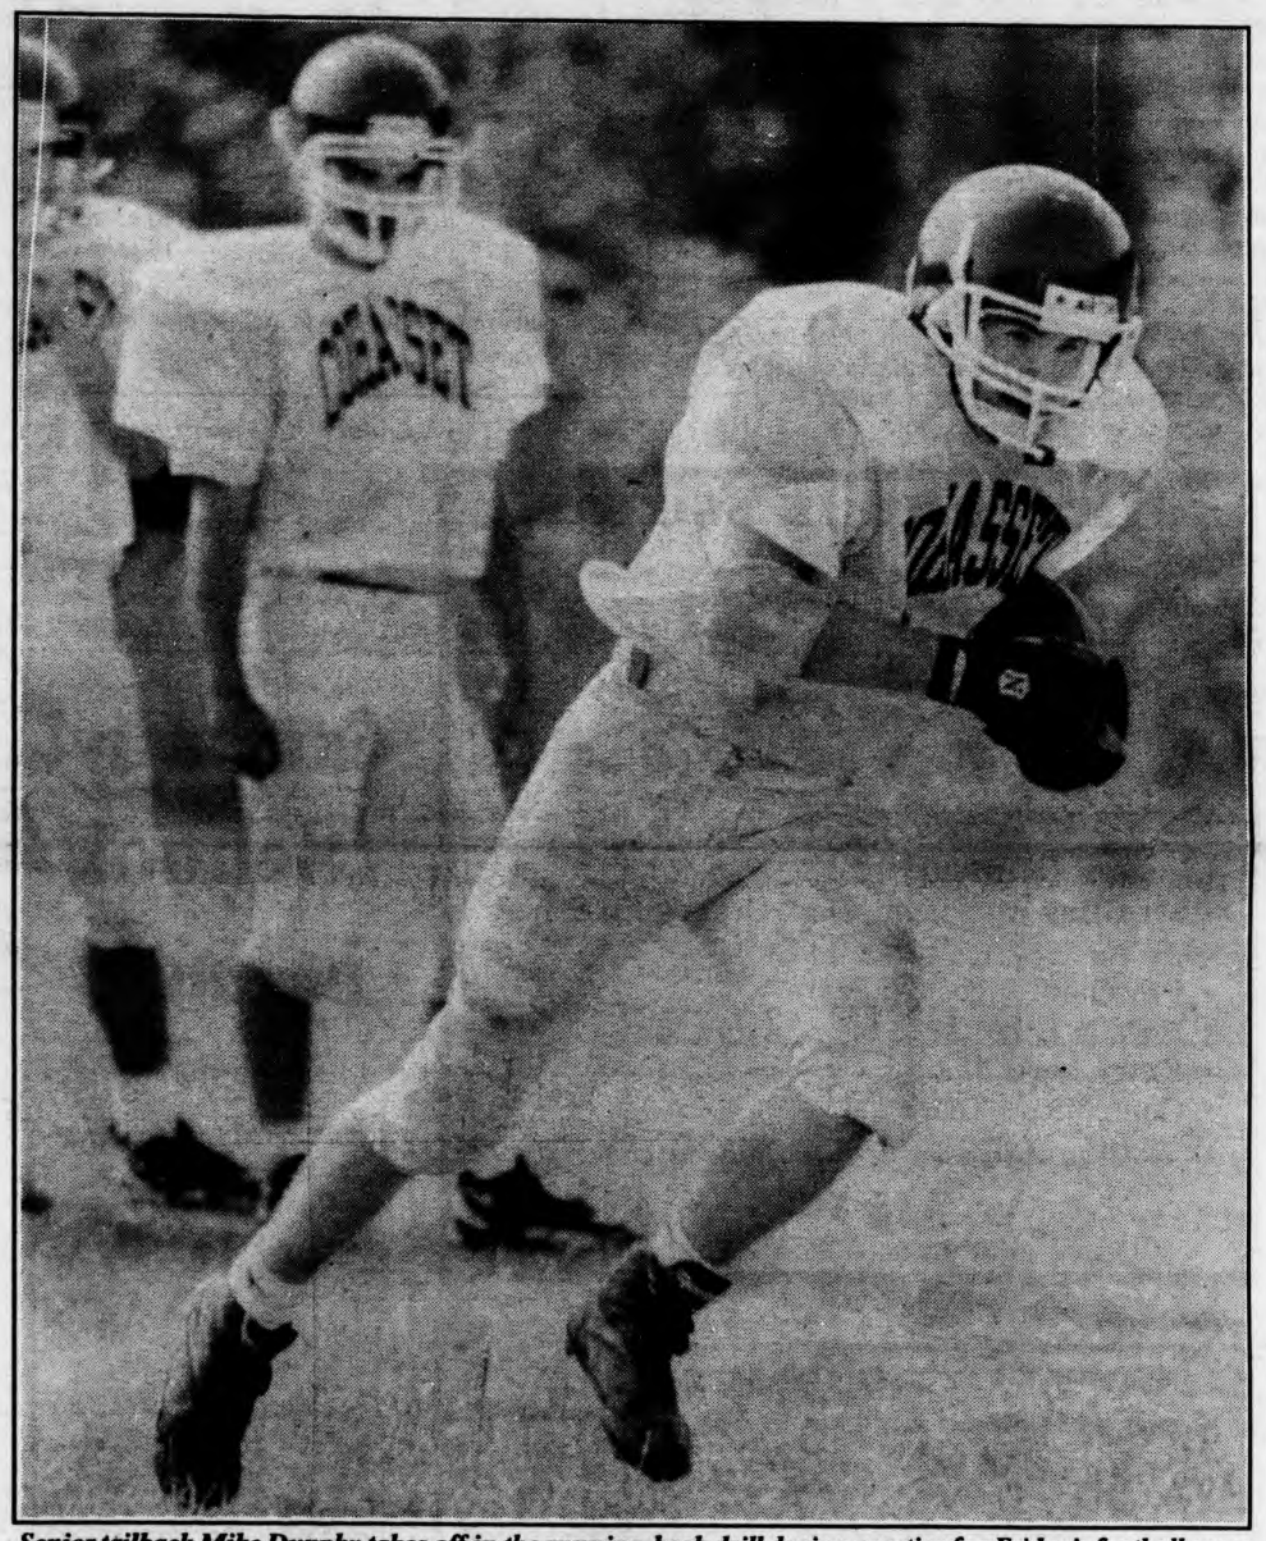
Cashing in on user fees



Senior tailback Mike Dunphy takes off in the running-back drill during practice for Friday's football game in the league jamboree in Carver. At Cohasset High, students pay a $75 user fee for the first sport. Officials say user fees which go toward the athletic budget are a necessary evil.

Cohasset fees make dent in sports' budget

BY DAVID MCKEE
Cohasset Mariner

If you want to play the game, you have to pay the price.

That is the message that many high school athletes have been given over the last decade as spiraling budgets have ushered in user fees that can often run into hundreds of dollars.

And while the debate rages on about the merits of user fees, some athletic directors and coaches say the fees have saved sports at their schools.

"Everyone feels bad about them but what can you do?" said Cohasset High athletic director Clark Chatterton. "Our athletic budget is roughly $150,000. We bring in roughly $40,000 in user fees. We've come to expect that. If the fees are done away with, that will mean cutting $40,000 from somewhere... That is the equivalent of a teacher."

At Cohasset High, user fees cost $75 for the first sport, $75 for the second and $50 for the third. There is no maximun for a family contribution. The fees have been in place for seven years at CHS.

"If a family has a couple kids who are really into sports that can run into some serious money," Chatterton said. "But ultimately, whenever people complain about the user fees I bring up the fact that some people in town have no problem dropping hundreds of dollars on prom night for a limo, a tuxedo or a dress. You have to look at the big picture."

Other school officials say the user fee system has kept their programs up-to-date.

> 'If the fees are done away with, that will mean cutting $40,000 from somewhere... That is the equivalent of a teacher.'
> — CHS athletic director Clark Chatterton

"Without user fees at Silver Lake our athletic program would be stuck in the 50s," said SL athletic director Ralph Frazier. "We would have football, basketball and baseball and that would be about it. Somewhere down the road it would be great if we could eliminate them. But as it stands now, if we want to keep our programs in place, the fees have to stay."

Silver Lake charges $100 per athlete for the entire school year. User fees have been charged at the regional high school since '82.

Other South Shore public schools charge anywhere from $75 per sport season at Hanover High (with a $225 per person and a $400 per family ceiling) to $100 per year at Hingham to $0 at Norwell and Rockland.

In addition, every school waives the fees for special hardship cases.

User fees help pay the tab for equipment, transportation, coaching and refereeing, according to athletic directors. The fees pick up where school budgets and town taxes fall short.

Fish will help keep midges at bay, officials say

BY DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

Voters at the November special town meeting will be asked to approve a fishing ban on the Cohasset portion of Straits Pond. A fishing ban is already in place on the Hull part of the pond.

Advocates say a fishing ban would help protect the pond's population of fish and eel, which eat midge larvae.

Midge infestations around the pond have been a serious problem in recent years.

Conservation commission vice chairman Edward Graham will obtain a copy of the Hull fishing ban. Graham has been studying the pond and possible long-term solutions to the midge situation.

A long discussion was held Tuesday night on the subject, during which residents of both towns discussed the pond with the conservation commission.

The discussion revealed difficulties coordinating information

Opening of tidal gates approved

Sewer plant expansion on table

BY DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

The conservation commission this week approved a request by the sewer commission to open the tidal gates near Kimball's so the effects on Jacob's Meadow can be studied.

Technically, the conservation commission voted to issue a negative determination on the opening of the gates, meaning the situation will not adversely affect the wetlands area.

However, the five-page decision included seven technical conditions mandating testing.

In addition, conservation commission chairman Thomas Callahan said the board will send a letter to selectmen and abutters urging that the condition of the tidal gates be examined.

Stating that the poor condition of the gates is not directly relevant to the sewer commission request, Callahan said that nonetheless, "that maintenance, that repair on it has to be addressed."

Sewer commissioners are considering several ways to expand the sewage treatment plant, which the state has charged is polluting.

COA to receive $4.3K grant

The Cohasset Council on Aging will receive a $4,327 grant from the Executive Office of Elder Affairs, according to Sen. Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth). Grants are based on the population figures from the most recent federal census (1990) at a rate of $3.20 per elder. All Councils on Aging are eligible for a minimum grant award of $1,000, regardless of the number of seniors in the community.

Sen. Robert L. Hedlund

The Cohasset COA will use the grant money to employ a part-time nutrition site manager, print and mail a Council on Aging brochure and provide for dues, volunteer recognition and conference/meeting registration.

Cable billing change slated

Continental Cablevision, which services Cohasset, notified selectmen Aug. 23 that it will begin a staggered billing cycle effective Oct. 1.

"Currently all our customers in southeastern, Mass., including those in Cohasset, are billed around the 26th of the month," wrote Joseph F. Hayes, community relations manager with Continental. "Generally, if customers have any questions or concerns about their bill, they call our customer service office immediately upon receipt of their statement.

"Since all of our customers receive their bills at the same time, our customer service phone lines tend to be overloaded the days immediately after the bills go out," Hayes said. "This sometimes results in our customers not getting the prompt attention that they deserve."

Hayes explained to avoid having customers pay one large bill when the new billing cycle is instituted, Continental will issue a "partial bill" covering the period between the end of the current billing cycle and the beginning of the new billing cycle.

Customers will be billed as follows:

- August 26 (statement to customer) covering service period from Sept. 1-10 (current cycle);
- Sept. 26 (statement to customer) covering service from Oct. 1-7 (partial bill);
- Oct. 4 (statement to customer) covering service from Oct. 8 through Nov. 7 (new cycle).

"Thereafter all future bills will be for a full month of service, beginning on the 8th day of the month and ending on the 7th day of the following month," Hayes said.

He said customers will be notified of the billing cycle change on their September bills. Inserts explaining the changes will also be included.

Town meeting is Nov. 6

It's now official: Cohasset voters will be asked to attend a special town meeting Monday, Nov. 6.

Monday night selectmen approved the date and agreed to open the warrant, to begin accepting potential articles for the town meeting, on Sept. 18.

The period for submitting articles will end Sept. 25.

South Shore Charter School makes its debut

Fifteen Cohasset students choose the new public school

BY ALICE COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

School began yesterday for the 150 students (15 of them from Cohasset) and 44 full and part-time teachers at the South Shore Charter School in Hull, and according to the school's founder and headmaster Timothy Anderson, the new public school is off to a great start.

Formed through the 1993 state Education Reform Act, 15 public charter schools are slated to open this month and not without some controversy. The funding of the new schools, which offer parents and students an alternative to public education in their own community, is set up so that the tuition dollars follow the students. For many communities, depending on how many students decide to make the switch, the economic impact can be severe. With 98 students trying the charter school on for size this year, Hull will lose more than $450,000. With 15 students enrolled at the charter school, the cost for Cohasset schools will be more than $70,000.

In this first year students in grades K-2 and 6-12 will attend the school. Next year when grades three,four, and five are added the enrollment will increase to 400, Anderson said.

Kindergartners had their first day Tuesday, and all other grades started Wednesday with a sort of Native American tribal ceremony on the beach. Students formed a medicine circle and started the school year in a symbolic way, Anderson said.

Later in the day, students discussed how they would form their "pods" —small groups of students who will work on projects together, and today (Sept. 7), Anderson said students were slated for a day of ocean exploration on a whale watch.

Project based learning will be central to the school's curriculum and in August students met with teachers and parents to devise their own individual learning plans which will allow students to learn at their own pace.

With three computers in every classroom, the school is in pretty good shape technologically speaking and Anderson said more equipment will be coming in over the next few weeks.

The software, hardware and modems that will provide parents access to a database complete with their students projects, grades and teachers' comments and allow them an opportunity to make comments of their own ,is on-line and Anderson said, the addition of phone lines in the school this week will make it more accessible. The charter school will also offer training sessions for parents who could use a little help on their own home computers or on accessing information from the school's database, Anderson said.

Charter school students will easily meet the state's Education Reform Act time and learning mandates by attending school 199 days this year. Kindergartners will attend school from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. and all other students will be in school from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. There will be no early release days but both secondary and primary school teachers will share a common planning period on either Wednesday mornings or afternoons, with other teachers filling in, in the classroom.

A fully supervised extended-day program with instructional time by a charter school teacher will go until 6 p.m. giving students some extra homework and learning time and allowing working parents to rest easier about their kids. Anderson said the program is open to all South Shore students including private and parochial school children.

Starting later this month, 20 Saturday programs in Russian, art, music and more will be available to students and parents providing families educational and quality time on the weekends.

As for transportation, non-Hull residents attending the school (there are currently 52) will be responsible for making their own way to school, but Anderson said there are incentives for parents who car pool with several students. "Charter barter" offers parents $1 per student, which they can use toward the school's extended-day program which costs $4 per hour or toward the Saturday morning programs. Hull residents will be able to ride one of the charter school's vans to school, he added.

Many area high school juniors and seniors have signed up for the Massasoit College courses being offered in the evenings starting this week at the Charter School through its Dual Enrollment Program. Anderson said students can earn high school and college credit simultaneously and it is absolutely free for area juniors and seniors. Enrollment in English composition, the ocean environment, early childhood development and marketing is open until the second class, Anderson said. For more information on this call (617) 925-3078.

The first week of this new public school has been a busy and exciting one so far and Anderson said it's been very moving to see parents and students coming in to the school.

"I feel very good about it," he said.

School plans to be aired

Voters at the November special town meeting will hear a report on the study of school facilities, which might include options for either a new school building or repair of the Osgood Elementary School.

School committee chairman Ralph Kidder said last week that town meeting could be asked to appropriate more money to continue the study. At the very least, town meeting will receive an update, which was required by the last year's town meeting vote authorizing a study.

Kidder also said that the grade configuration could be changed, with the creation of a middle school for grades 6 - 8. A new middle school building could be proposed, he said.

He said that planning must be underway now, since the Osgood school is out of date and crowded, while school enrollment is growing.

'Committed' persons now have legal recourse, local attorney says

The state Supreme Judicial Court recently upheld a ruling that clarifies the circumstances under which a person may be committed for treatment of drug or alcohol problems.

Cohasset attorney Joseph Broderick said his client, a woman in her late 20s whose name did not disclose, was committed for treatment of alleged drug abuse based statements of family members who had no first-hand knowledge of it.

Broderick said the law under which she was denied the right to appeal the ruling has now been clarified.

He explained that his client had a history of drug abuse, but had been "in recovery" for more than a year. Her family saw evidence in a change of lifestyle, of which they did not approve. She had begun to associate with "undesirable people"; she appeared run-down; and did not return home for long periods of time.

These observations by her family, coupled with statements made to them by others, led them to seek the woman's commitment to a in-patient treatment facility.

"Her father was relying on what he'd been told by others," Broderick said.

He added that there was no diagnosis of a present drug problem, but the judge allowed a commitment for 30 days without recourse. Without a clinical diagnosis by an expert psychologist, no other evidence or testimony will suffice to order the commitment.

Prior to this ruling, the woman would only have been granted a review of the commitment ruling after four days if she had been committed for mental health reasons. There were no provisions for review for an involuntary commitment based on alleged drug or alcohol abuse.

This law was routinely applied in courts throughout Massachusetts. His appeal of the ruling to the SJC is the first time the law had been clarified, he said.

"A family can't commit someone just because they don't like the way a person is living," Broderick said, adding, "Maybe 99 times out of 100, it's the right thing to do, but if you're the 100th, it's not right."

Sewer plant expansion

Piping treated water to the meadow is one of them. The sewer commission wants to determine how the meadow drains and what effect of additional salt water would have on the marshy area.

Within the next six months, sewer commissioners plan to open the gates six times, for either a 12 or 24-hour period.

The plan is ardently opposed by most abutters, who told the conservation commission Aug. 15 that when the tidal gates broke for four days during a storm last year, the area surrounding Summer and Elm Streets was flooded, with salt water killing many trees and ruining lawns.

They say water levels have remained uncomfortably high around many properties throughout this summer's drought. Several neighbors fear extensive flooding when the tidal gates are open during the fall, which is traditionally a wet time of year.

During the Aug. 15 meeting, sewer commissioner Ted Guild assured residents that water levels would be closely monitored while the gates are open.

Many area residents are not enthusiastic about a pipe into Jacob's Meadow, preferring a pipe directly into the harbor, which drains well. However, that option is expected to be considerably more expensive.

In explaining the project to the conservation commission, engineer Daniel Coughlin also said that increasing the flow of salt water would improve the ecology of the meadow. He said that an invasion of phragmites, an aggressive plant with few natural enemies, and little value to wildlife, is driving out more desirable species. Salt water would likely reduce the phragmite infestation.

Fishing ban, more study proposed for Straits between two towns and indicated that no one solution is going to satisfy everyone.

Another meeting is planned Sept. 21 at 7:30 p.m. at town hall. Hull officials have been invited to discuss the pond, in particular the regulation of the water level of the pond.

Graham presented a schedule indicating that the gates to the pond are opened regularly for two hours to allow colder ocean water to circulate.

Not only is colder salt water less likely to encourage midge growth, the open gates also let in predators which feed on the tiny insects.

A number of Cohasset residents have complained that the water level at the pond has been kept unusually high this summer, causing flooding in at least two Cohasset yards.

Jerusalem Road resident Walter Schroeder urged that the water level be dropped, "to stop the damage that is happening on the Cohasset side."

He reported that salt water has risen over his wall and is killing his lawn. He said if the high water levels continue, his swimming pool might be undermined.

Former Hull conservation commission member Diana Goode explained that higher water levels are desirable because deeper water keeps the pond from over heating.

Warmer water encourages midge growth and causes oxygen reduction which kills fish.

Schroeder replied that he does not want to see the pond drained, simply lowered a few inches below his sea wall.

Graham questioned how much good opening the tidal gates does if only a portion of the water is changed.

"How much of the pond is really getting flushed?" he asked.

Goode said that state environmental authorities will not let the pond be completely drained unless an agricultural or aquacultural reason is demonstrated.

She also claimed that there are 14 inches of "toxic mud" at the bottom of the pond.

Callahan said that he had been told that if the pond were drained in the winter, the bottom would freeze and kill midge larvae.

When the pond was drained several years ago, the following summer saw the worst midge infestation in years, according to Callahan.

Because the pond is at a higher elevation than the ocean, if the causeway at Forest Ave. Extension were opened, the pond would drain into the ocean, creating a marshy estuary.

Callahan called that a possible long-term solution.

However, he also pointed out that since the pond area is one of only two dozen areas of critical environmental concern, ACEC, in the state, it is subject to even more stringent regulation than other wetlands.

Any permanent changes would require approval from state authorities.

Noting that Hull has tested every residential septic system along the pond for possible pollution, Callahan said Cohasset should do the same.

"A lot of people in Cohasset are going to have to face the fact that they have septic systems that are contributing and some are far away," he said, adding that the dump, the golf course and houses near them could also be contributing to pollution in the water system which drains into Straits Pond.

In his presentation, Graham stressed that although there is evidence of ample fish life in the pond, the water does appear polluted.

"Is there danger from that water? I don't have that answer," he said, calling for more study.

Apparently, the only action which has caused an obvious reduction in midges has been spraying of the chemical abate on the pond, a solution which remains controversial.

"We don't like spraying of abate, but it's all that works," he said.

Robert McCunney, who also lives on Jerusalem Road, said there "is a certain chemical phobia," to the automatic opposition to spraying and asked if the matter had been researched.

Callahan and conservation commission member Veneta Roebuck both told him they have spoken with state authorities and outside experts.

Hull resident Ann Murray said the problem with spraying is that it eventually becomes ineffective.

"After ten years of spraying with something, the little buggys get to like it," she said. "They mutate and it doesn't do much good."

Residents fear fatality along Jerusalem Road

BY DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

Midges are not the only hazard around Straits Pond residents say.

The section of Jerusalem Road along Windy Hill Road contains dangerous curves and overgrown vegetation has further obscured visibility.

Residents fear that a child or even an adult will someday be added to the list of animals killed walking along the road.

For years the residents say they have sought to get a path cut along the road so they may walk in safety. In addition, they have also sought a path to Straits Pond.

After viewing the area and meeting with residents last June, town officials agreed to the path.

The conservation commission had already approved enough cutting so a path six feet wide could be cut through the underbrush.

Straits Pond is an area of critical environmental concern because of the wildlife habitat and therefore comes under close state and local regulation.

Although the highway department did some cutting, residents say that the effort was not enough and that the path is now overgrown.

In Sept. 6 letters to a number of officials, including Peter Pearce, chairman of the newly-formed sidewalk committee, Windy Hill Road resident Virginia Ferenz said the path which was cleared in June is now over grown and impassable.

She urged Pearce to recommend a sidewalk for that stretch of Jerusalem Road.

The sidewalk committee has recommended a sidewalk along Jerusalem Road ending at Forest Ave.

"Every year cars drive off the road, misjudging the curves and animals are killed," Ferenz wrote. "We would like to know why this area was not included in your list of streets. Cohasset certainly does not end at Forest Avenue. We have many, many pedestrians walking to Black Rock Beach and West's Corner. I have enclosed photos showing how the path that Mr.(highway surveyor Harold) Litchfield's men attempted to clear, is totally overgrown with brush — as was expected. Someone is going to get killed out here . . ."

Ferenz, who is also a popular Mariner beautification columnist, told the conservation commission Tuesday night that she has been trying to get the path cleared for 11 years.

"We're frustrated that we finally got to this point," she said. "We go nowhere."

Ferenz said that officials have not responded to her letters on the subject.

The commission, which turned down her offer to beautify the area with rose bushes in 1994, saying that the land around the pond must remain wild to provide a habitat for animals, took a more favorable view to the path.

Thomas Callahan said they agreed that limited cutting is warranted considering the safety hazard posed by walking in the street.

He said they would tell their views to the highway department.

"We'd like it (path) done," he said. "And we'd like it done now."

Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon said Wednesday that the path has already been created.

"It has been cut," he said. "Maybe it needs to be cut again."

Litchfield conceded that the path may need attention. "Maybe it's overgrown now," he said this week.

He agreed that the path is necessary.

"There is no place to walk," he said.

Other area residents have also complained about the situation.

"... over the years it has grown progressively worse and all attempts to rectify the situation have proved fruitless," Windy Hill Road resident Faye Camardo wrote to the conservation commission.

"There is an urgent need for action to be taken and priority be given to avoid the inevitable," wrote Frances Crowley, also of Windy Hill Road.

Our receiving a "happening" by the deadline doesn't automatically guarantee it will appear that week. Sometimes due to space constraints, we must prioritize and pick those events which will occur that weekend or during the following week.

Happy New Year!

We can't for the life of us understand why January 1 was selected as the day to start the new year.

For one day, we poke our heads outside in the subfreezing cold and shout "Happy New Year!"

Then, like the groundhog, we disappear into our holes again and wait for the first caresses of spring.

How much better would it be to appoint September 1 as the first day of the new year?

Isn't that the day when everything begins anew?

The summer is over. The last vacationer is home from the mountains or the beach. The kids are back from camp.

We've had our annual ration of fun and now it is time to get back to work with a new enthusiasm urged on by the crisp fall air.

The kids are back in school, pretending they don't like it, but actually eager to meet new teachers and see old friends of the peer group.

One whole class is making the transition from high school to college, eager and a little scared by the prospect of the new year.

It's time for the garden club to launch a new year, and the Parent Councils too, and all the other little groups that, without fanfare, help make life more worthy of living.

Footballs fly through the brisk air and sports fans know that the scrape of skates on ice and the thump of basketballs on the floor cannot be far behind.

You can get a good night's sleep — without the AC — and know that you are not going to wake up in the morning in a pool of warm sweat.

Soon, the clocks will be set back and the nights will be longer and you'll have an extra hour to wake up in the morning.

The kitchen will produce the enticing smells of cookies, muffins and breads for it will be comfortable to turn on the oven again.

And if we never see another salad again it will be too soon.

There's room, with the summer people gone, to walk the beach in solitude and enjoy the waves which seem to swell a little taller and collapse a little more noisily as if to celebrate a new year.

There's the aroma of falling leaves, too, although we are forever denied the unforgettable smell of burning leaves by the spoilsport environmentalists.

By God, we'll say it.

Happy New Year!

Lightkeepers' finances are detailed

Monthly reports available for inspection

To the Editor:

The goal of the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation always has been to provide low or no-cost function room facilities to local non-profit organizations, while preserving a building of some historic value. This objective can be achieved only by recognizing the realities of renovation and operating costs, and offsetting these costs by the fees charged to other organizations and to individuals (in addition to the proceeds from fundraisers).

What may seem like undue commercialization is actually the action needed to remain solvent. Otherwise the basic objective can't be achieved. Currently, CLC's costs include paying-off the remainder of a $75,000 loan, while paying more than 10 percent interest on the unpaid balance (about $20,000 as of Sept. 1 1995). Also, some capital expenditures have had to be made during the first year of operation, and have yet to be made, to complete the kitchen and function room facilities.

In addition to operating expense for utilities, custodial, general maintenance, etc., funds should be set aside in reserve accounts for periodic repainting of exterior, re-roofing, appliance replacement, etc. To date, no such funds have been set aside, because the first priority has been paying down the loan. When the loan is paid off, funding of the reserve accounts will replace funding for loan amortization.

The renovation cost far exceeded initial expectations (old buildings are full of surprises!), but fortunately the community has responded well to various fundraising activities, and some of the labor and materials has been donated. Nevertheless the project could not have been completed sufficient to begin operation without the $75,000 bank loan, which was available to be used, in effect, as a revolving line of credit.

CLC has four sources of income: donations, rent from the two apartments on the second floor, annual fees from member-directors and from associate members, and fees from the Bancroft Hall function room. About 60 percent of the Bancroft Hall bookings are free of charge. In the coming year, any excess of income over operating expense will be applied primarily to loan amortization, and secondarily to some near-term capital expenditures such as improvement of acoustics and upgrading of furnishings. Whatever is left, if any, will be set aside in reserve accounts for future capital expenditures such as appliance replacement, exterior painting, roof replacement etc. Only when the loan is fully paid off will the reserve accounts begin to be properly funded.

Only then can CLC begin to consider that income has caught up with capital and operating expenses. Then, if projected income significantly exceeds projected expense, it will be appropriate to introduce more flexibility into the fee schedule.

Donations and proceeds from fundraisers will, of course, advance the date when CLC is free of debt, can begin to properly fund reserve accounts, and reach break-even.

Although much labor and materials have been donated by members and by others such as the garden clubs, CLC cannot rely continually on volunteer labor for maintenance, custodial and hall management service, repainting etc., and will contract for these services. Member-directors receive no remuneration, actually pay

Vietnam Moving Wall invokes legacy of sacrifice and loss

BY PAULA WOODHULL
Cohasset Mariner

All week long they came, one by one, to leave touching messages from the heart.

"To Kevin - Thinking of you Bro," said one note resting next to a pink chrysanthemum.

Further down the wall a single pink rose was attached to a small white wooden stake for William T. Hagerty.

Two roses for Freddie Follette. A big pot of red mums for Willie Bilbo.

Someone else left a bunch of wildflowers for a friend. "Love 'ya Bill," read the card.

Thousands of people flocked to Pembroke over the long Labor Day weekend to see and feel the half-scale replica of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Wall on display at the North River Plaza.

Another hand-written message left in memory of Pamela Donovan of Brighton said simply "You will be in our prayers, from Jenn and Jane."

The note card stated that Donovan was killed in Vietnam on July 8, 1968, the only female listed on the wall from Massachusetts.

Opening day ceremonies for the Moving Wall under brilliant skies on Saturday attracted between 500 and 1,000 visitors.

Many openly wept and others fought back tears as one speaker after another invoked painful memories of the Vietnam War and its legacy of loss and sacrifice.

But the day's warm sun and light breeze promised life and hope.

Vicki Fitts of Pembroke laid a memorial wreath at the wall in memory of the missing in action. For the next several days they came from all over the South Shore to pay tribute to the 58,196 men and women killed in Vietnam and those who are still listed as missing in action.

The average age of veterans listed on the wall is 19. One hundred twenty-seven are from the South Shore, according to Bob McKean of the state commissioner's office on veterans affairs.

"No one escaped the trauma of Vietnam," said Becky Coit of the Rockland Abington Vietnam Era Post 2. "We still hurt."

Russell Brandi of Pembroke came to the opening day ceremonies to remember a buddy, James P. Hickey of Quincy whose name is listed on the wall.

"He was a close friend of mine." Brandi said he has not been to the actual wall in Washington, D. C. "But I think I'll go now."

Brandi served in the U.S. Army in Vietnam from 1970 to 1973 but like many Vietnam vets prefers to leave his experience of the war behind him. "I'd rather not talk about it," he said.

The presence of the Moving Wall resurrected long-buried emotions in many veterans, mainly positive ones. "I think it's great," said Brandi of the wall. "It's about time they did something."

Carl Peterson of Pembroke served off the coast of Vietnam in a nuclear submarine from 1959 to 1962, a few years before the massive build-up of ground forces began in 1965.

He paid a visit to the wall out of curiousity and "because of the four years I served for Uncle Sam."

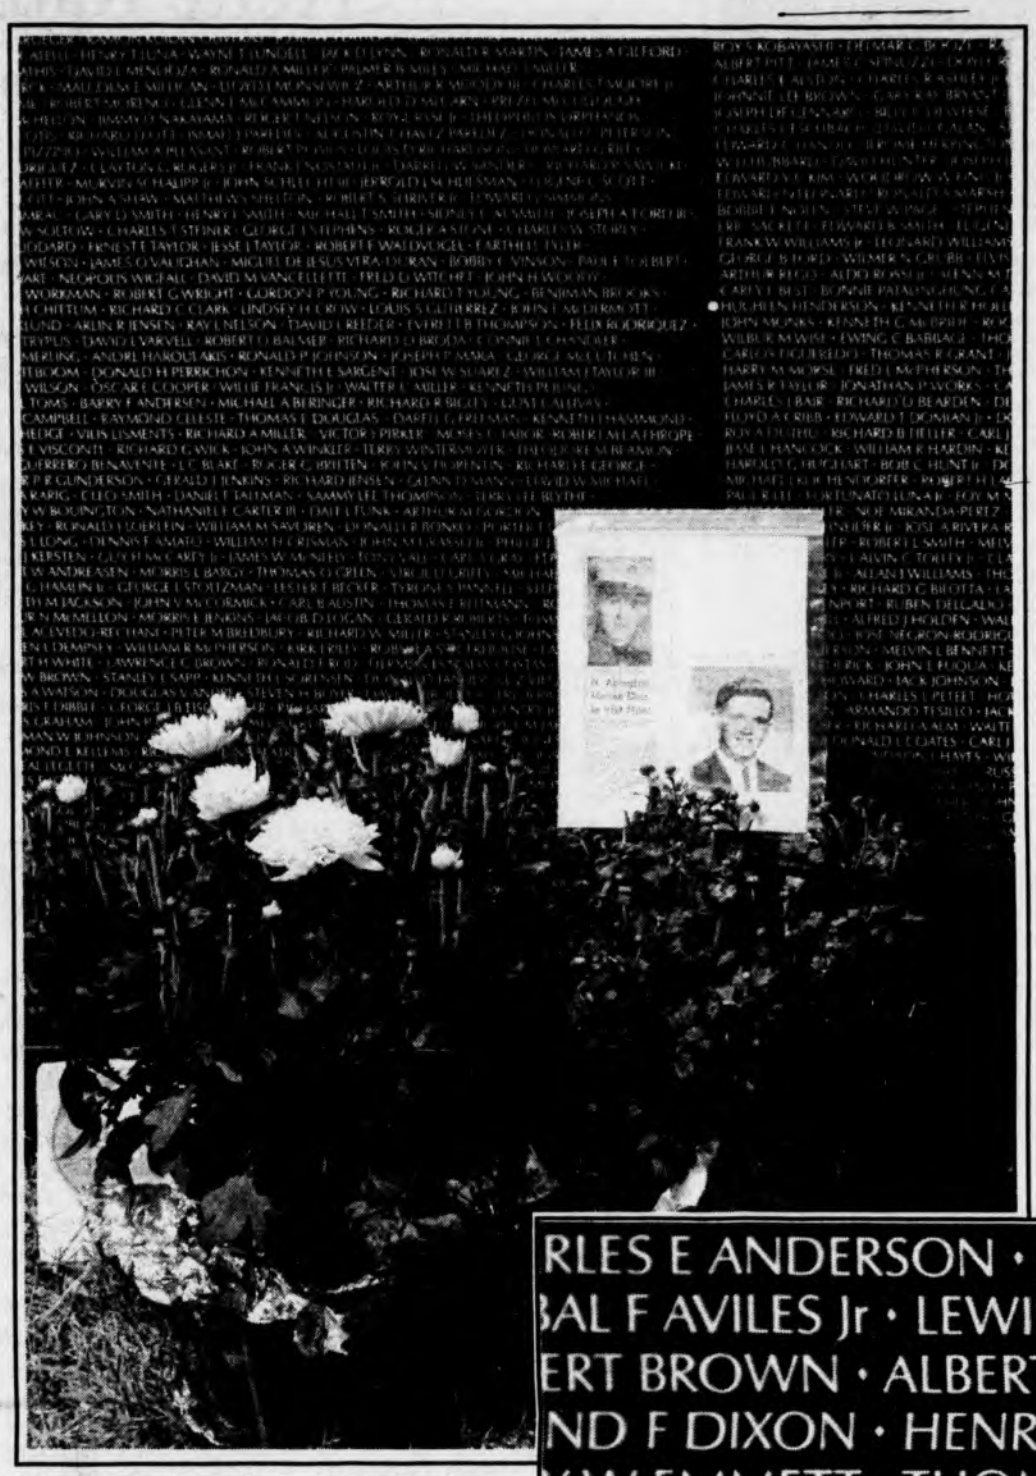
Organizer Bob Rice, a Navy veteran who served during the Vietnam War era, said the Moving Wall's arrival in Pembroke culminated four years of planning.

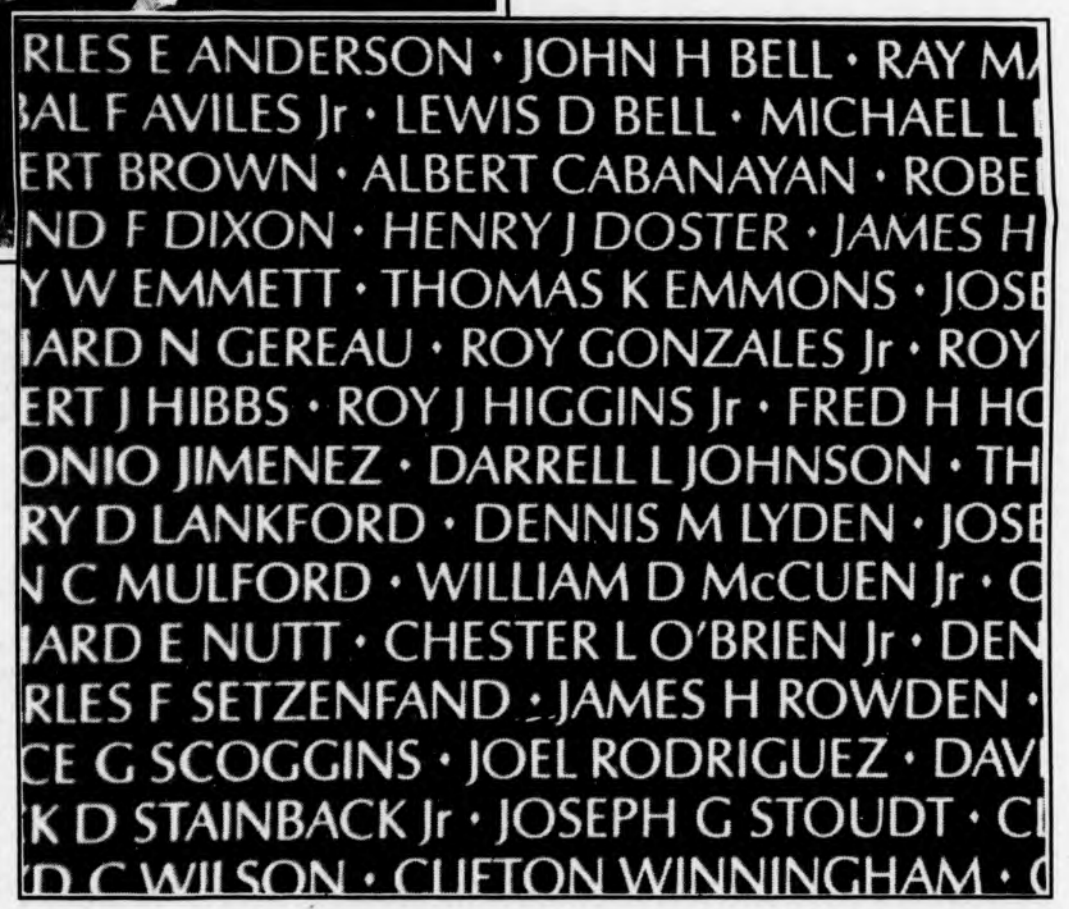
"This has truly been a community project," he said. Color guards from the local area and around the state participated in opening day ceremonies and the Silver Lake high school singing group, Spirit, also performed.

Plymouth County District Attorney Michael Sullivan attended Saturday's grand opening of the Moving Wall. "I saw neighbors say goodbye to relatives and friends" who went off to Vietnam, he recalled.

He said he was 17 when President Nixon authorized a cease-fire in January 1973 at the Paris peace talks. In April 1975 the South Vietnamese surrendered to North Vietnam and Saigon fell to the Communists.

After seeing the memorial wall in Washington for the first time, Sullivan said, "I saw the names and became overwhelmed. I felt a sudden sadness and a great loss. Never before and never since have I thought about Vietnam without thinking about those heroes."





Thousands of people flocked to Pembroke to see the half-scale replica of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Wall on display at the North River Plaza. Many left touching messages from the heart to lost loved ones.

Some streets need 30 m.p.h. signs

To the Editor:

I completely agree with the intent of Andrew Quigley's letter in the August 31 Cohasset Mariner.

Since I read the letter I have driven Jerusalem Road, Atlantic Avenue, Nichols Road and Beach Street and 30 m.p.h. is not inappropriate for these streets and I believe for most others in Cohasset (not including Rte. 3A).

The problem is these limits are not posted and drivers far exceed this speed repeatedly.

I also run along all these streets and share Mr. Quigley's concern about safety along these roads in particular.

a membership fee, and would pay the same fee as anyone else for using Bancroft Hall.

In summary, the realities of cost require that CLC be operated in a business-like manner, charging significant fees for the use of Bancroft Hall (except that fees are waived for local non-profit organizations). As a non-profit corporation, CLC is required to submit detailed annual reports to Federal and State agencies. These reports, the projected budget (or business plan), and monthly financial reports are available for inspection.

Cohasset Heights files site application

BY JOHN MCNABB
Special to the Cohasset Mariner

The privately owned Cohasset Heights Landfill filed on Aug. 31, its site assignment application with the state Department of Environmental Protection and Cohasset Board of Health.

This is the first actual permit application filed by CHL for its proposed Area V landfill expansion; it also needs a special permit from the Zoning Board of Appeals and further permits from DEP to construct and operate the expansion.

This application seeks a favorable "Site Suitability Report" from DEP and a "Site Assignment" permit from the health board. This permit review is on the following timetable:

• August 31 — permit application filed with DEP and health board; 21-day completeness review by DEP which accepts public comments on whether the application is complete.

• Sept. 21 — Public Notice printed of availability of application (if application is complete); 21-day public comment period on the application.

• Oct. 12 — Public comment period ends (written comments accepted).

• Nov. 20 — DEP issues "site suitability" report; makes determination whether the site is suitable or not. Public Notice is printed that report is released. Health board must hold first public hearing within 30 days.

• Dec. 20 — Site assignment hearings by health board begin. State law requires that hearings begin within 30 days of a positive report.

• Feb. 10 — Board of health decides whether to grant site assignment. State law requires a decision within 45 days of first public hearing.

Please call 383-6202 for more information.

Police Briefs

Officers injured during arrest

Two Cohasset police officers were injured during an arrest last Thursday (Aug. 31), Sgt. Robert W. Jackson said.

Police accused Jeramine Goodfellow, 22, of 8 Tara Drive, Weymouth, of assault and battery of officers Shellee Peters and David Cogill, who were treated for injuries at South Shore Hospital.

Goodfellow fled the scene after the motor vehicle he was driving struck a stone wall on Beechwood Street at 9:12 p.m. Aug. 31, police said.

Police charged Goodfellow with operating under the inflence of alcohol; driving with an open container of alcohol; failure to stay within marked lane; leaving the scene after property damage; operating a motor vehicle after suspension (3rd or subsequent offense); operating a motor vehicle negligently to endanger; two counts of assault and battery on a police officer in performance of his (or her) duties; threats to commit a crime; and wanton destruction of personal property valued at over $250.

Goodfellow was held overnight and released on $1,000 cash bail, Jackson said. A court date is set for Sept. 15.

Officer Cogill is back at work, but Peters is out with a dislocated jaw, police said.

Pot plants found, burned

At 11 a.m., Tuesday (Sept. 5) police confiscated 22 marijuana plants being cultivated in the "Wolf Pit" area of Wompatuck State Park at the end of Beechwood Street near the town reservoir, Sgt. Robert W. Jackson said.

Jackson estimated the value of the plants at about $3,000.

Det. Rick Grassie said this is the second time in as many years that police confiscated plants from that area..

"They were getting to the point, that they're ready to cultivate," he said about the plants which were six feet high.

CHS Football Coach Bob Sylvia encourages his linemen at a recent practice. The gridders hope to be quicker off the line this season. (Staff photo by Alan Chapman)

Quicker look expected for CHS gridders

BY JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Skippers varsity football team is prepared to tackle the 1995 football season with a new coach, new offense and several new players.

After a successful year in 1994, (the last for stars like Tom Allen, Nick Welz, Dorian Bryant and Jerome Marion) the Skippers are a quicker team and their new coach has high expectations for them.

Coach Bob Knurek, also the freshman basketball and junior varsity baseball coach, has stepped up from his position as coach of freshman football and will lead the Skippers this year.

When asked what he expected of this year's squad, he replied, "One hundred percent concentration and effort every second on the field, whether it be in practice or during a game. From the moment they step onto the field right up until the pads come off, there should be total focus."

He said that it was too early to tell which players would stand out but expected a big year from experienced seniors such as safeties Kevin Gentile and Mike Dunphy, Captains Brian Sasso and Brian Riley, Nate Caldwell, and starting quarterback Ben Keefe. "Seniors like that should lead by example," Knurek said.

Seniors new to a football field like Pat Reynolds, Greg Stevens, Mike Coates and Keith Wright are also expected to help the Skippers this season.

When asked to compare this year's bunch to last year's, Knurek commented that they were completely different. "This year, we're much faster and smaller. We'll have to rely on quickness and intelligence more so than last year."

"This is a team with a lot of heart. Teams might beat us with their experience, but they won't beat us by giving more of an effort."

Cohasset's future on the gridiron also looks bright. "Our younger players look extremely strong. We have a solid group of juniors and sophomores. We have about 20 freshman who play and a good eighth grade as well.

"My plan for this year is to maximize the seniors' final year, while rebuilding the program and creating a successful future for Cohasset football."

Cohasset's new look team has a lot to make up for: experience, size and strength, but Coach K's boys just might be able to pull it off.

The Skippers first game will at the league Jamboree at Carver High at 6 p.m. The first opening games will be Sept. 16 at 1:30 at West Bridgewater.

Community Center hosts golf tourney

The South Shore Community Center jointly with the Council on Aging will hold its First Annual Golf Tournament, The South Shore Open, Sept. 15, at the Pembroke Country Club.

Play will be a scramble with a shot gun start at 1:30 p.m. Interested golfers are invited to play in this tournament which will benefit the South Shore Community Center and Council on Aging. A fee of $125 covers play, greens fee, cart, dinner, golf shirt and goody bag, and prizes.

Golf Committee Co-Chair Chris Horne anticipates "a terrific turnout. We're really excited about this first tournament. It's been very well received and we expect approximately 144 golfers."

Lead sponsors for this event, Bostek, Inc. of Hanover, a computer distribution company, an anonymous friend to the Council on Aging, and Dave Dinger Ford of Braintree, have generously contributed. Sponsors for holes and silent auction donations are still being received on a daily basis.

If you would like to participate, contribute, or require any additional information about The South Shore Open, please call Nancy Powers Walsh at 383-0088.

Cohasset fees make dent in sports' budget

"There aren't many people who are crazy about user fees but they are very understanding about why we have to have them," Frazier said. "The money goes right into the program and we try to do as much with our budget as we can. There is a base of taxpayer money that goes into the school system and there is only so much for athletics. And in tough times, you have to do what you have to do."

Most schools have booster clubs which help off-set the costs of high school athletics. However, even with the best booster program, more money is needed.

"I don't like having user fees at Marshfield High and in a perfect world the town would support our programs entirely," said MHS athletic director Ed Miller. "But the reality is that costs are constantly going up and if we want to maintain the level people are accustomed to, we have to have user fees."

Marshfield High has a $160 per year charge for student athletes. It used to be $200 per year. The fees started eight years ago at MHS.

"Parents and students seem to understand," Miller said. "They've played youth sports and are familiar with all the costs involved. But that still doesn't mean they have to like them."

Miller would like to reduce the user fees at MHS even more and eventually eliminate them.

Hingham High athletic director Bill Barges calls user fees a 'necessary evil' in these tough budget times. They have been in place for six years at HHS.

"I hope someday we won't have to have them," he said. "But they have been helpful in establishing our athletic programs. We've grown over the years and we've had to find ways to get the most for our money. I don't like having them in place, but they are a necessary evil as things stand."

Scituate High recently enacted a $50 per year charge for all students participating in after-school extra-curricular activities. The $50 is not called a user fee but an "Activity/Transportation Pass." The school committee voted in a one-year trial run for the program. Previously the school had a user fee in '90- '91 during steep budget cuts.

SHS principal Prudence Goodale said the $50 fee will also fund an after-school late bus.

"This is similar to a college activity fee," she said. "And the money will be used solely for transportation. If we didn't have the pass in place, we would not be able to have all our programs. We would have to make some cuts."

At Cohasset High, there is a $75 charge for the first sport. A $75 charge for the second sport and a $50 charge for the third sport. There is no family limit. And while Cohasset is considered an affluent town, $75 per sport can add up quickly in an athletic family.

While many believe user fees have helped maintain high school athletic programs, others say the fees eventually drive people away from sports.

Rockland High used to have user fees of $100 per season but ended the practice last year after several serious incidents involving RHS students. The most serious was the baseball bat beating of a man at a sub shop.

While the user fee system was not to blame for the beating, school officials took steps to increase involvement and pride in Rockland High. Eliminating user fees was one of many steps.

"User fees were a nightmare," said RHS athletic director Bob Fisher. "Athletics are about two words: get involved. And when you want people to get involved at school and then you ask them for an extra $100 in addition to the taxes they pay, it can be a bit much. Sure, a lot of Rockland's problems got more attention than other towns, but it is an issue that everyone faces."

Fisher said that since the user fees were wiped out, more and more people are getting involved in sports.

"We were losing a lot of the players, especially those on the fence, because of the user fees," Fisher said. "You take a kid who might not be a starter or who is interested in trying a new sport and tell him he has to pay $100 on top of what his family pays in taxes. A majority of those kids took a walk and didn't play. But now our numbers are up and everyone is pleased."

Even with the hardship waiver system in place, Fisher said the user fees just weren't getting it done.

"We had bounced checks coming back or kids getting all the money from their parents in the morning and not having it all by the afternoon," he said. "It just didn't work. Even with the hardships, you have to have a cut-off somewhere and how can you tell a kid that he has to pay the full $100 when you tell another he doesn't have to. It can be very trying."

Fisher is pleased the Rockland School system put their money where their mouth is in regards to athletics and eliminated the user fees.

"We all felt collectively that if a school sponsors a program they should maintain it whether it's an English program or a sports program," he said. "Athletics can often get lost in the transition but we think it is in the best interest of everyone that the fees were taken away. And it was a great move for the school and the town."

Norwell High has never had user fees and athletic director Bill Gerety said he will take every step possible (including the elimination of programs) to keep user fees from coming to NHS.

"The idea is that athletics is part of education," Gerety said. "And while it isn't the most important part, it is important enough for support from the town. Athletics shouldn't be any different from other activities like drama or the band."

Gerety said he will do all that he can to keep user fees from NHS.

"We run a pretty tight ship as it is," he said. "But we get a lot of great help from the boosters and if we didn't have them, it might be a different situation. But I'd do everything possible, even it is means cutting back on some programs, to keep the fees away."

Gerety said school systems have to put money in the programs they think are most important.

"I'd estimate 80-90 percent of the students are involved in some form of extra curricular activity," he said. "And if a school system feels something is important, they should find a way to fund it. People have enough of a burden raising a family. They don't need any additional costs."

Town, cost, length of fees

Marshfield: $160 per year, eight years .

Pembroke, Kingston: $100 per year, 12 years

extra points

JoeReardon Dave McKee

Now that summer is officially over, it is time for the fall high school athletic season to begin. And as someone who has seen a few seasons come and go, there are several things that fans can expect.

*At least two football coaches will absolutely lose their minds along the sidelines after a referee tosses a penalty flag.

I usually watch football games up close and it is always fun watching grown men yell and scream over someone dropping a yellow hanky on the field.

My favorite move is when a coach throws his clipboard or headset into the ground to emphasize their point during an argument.

For some reason football coaches tend to be more intense than say your average cross country coach. Maybe it's having to play late Friday night or early Saturday afternoon instead of during the weekday.

*There will be 15 whistles during every field hockey game that cannot be explained.

I've searched high and low and still can't find anyone who knows every field hockey rule. It is a very fast-paced sport with sticks and many players running around so I guess the refs blow the whistle every once and a while for something to do. If you watch closely they usually roll their hands together and say something like "Illegal play and give one team the ball. One day I might kipnap a ref and give it a whirl. I bet no one will notice.

* At least twice during every soccer game, you'll hear the phrase 'Good ball" yelled from the stands.

Soccer is a cool sport and when someone makes a wonderful pass it is better to say, "Good ball" instead of "Nice pass" or something like that. I don't know why things are like this but I always try to be as cool as possible so I join in the fun.

When I buy a ticket to a soccer game I say, "Good stub." Or when I buy popcorn, its "Good kernals."

*Cross country runners will continue to sweat very little.

Sure, when you or I run we huff and puff like a choo-choo train. But your average high school runner bounds for five miles and cruises to the finish line without any strain. It is a very depressing sight.

And usually when they finish their race, they sneak a quick look at their watch like they're waiting for a bus to pull in.

When most humans finish running a long distance they are holding their sides and coughing their lungs up. Not cross country runners. They actually look happy.

*At least three sportswriters will be submarined along the sidelines during a halfback sweep at a football game.

Many sportswriters like to stay as close to the sidelines as possible during the game and this usually spells trouble for knee ligaments.

Let's set the scene. It's second down and four and you're flipping through your program trying to find out who number 27 is. You notice the runner is being forced outside during the play and you watch to see if he is going to make a first down.

"He's getting kinda close to us," you start to think as the play heads your direction. Then all of sudden, you're screwed as 11 adrenaline-filled high schoolers in pads and helmets are trying to squash you like a grape in pursuit of the ball carrier. You are lucky if you only receive an elbow to the head.

Next thing you know, you've been dumped on the ground and some kid is saying "Sorry Mister" as the stars swirl arond your head.

After you finally remember what planet you're on, you try and find your notebook and pen. Finding the notebook is easy. Finding the pen is tough. I've lost too many pens the last few years after a pile-up. It isn't pretty.

*And lastly, fall is the only sports season that starts out in shorts and ends up in parkas.

Going to games during the early weeks of September is great fun. It is sunny out, you can work on your tan and even wear a T-shirt and shorts if you like.

But October rolls around and suddenly the air turns cold and your shorts disappear.

By late November you are freezing to death and spend most of the time blowing onto to your hands to keep them from freezing during the games. At the final Thanksgiving football game, you are mistaken for an Eskimo because you are wearing four heavy coats. You can't move your arms but you are warm.

Warm writers are happy writers.

Blood drive is Sept. 13

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive in memory of the late Rev. Edward T. Atkinson for Wednesday, Sept. 13. The Red Cross Bloodmobile will be at the Unitarian Parish House at 23 North Main Street from 2 to 7 p.m. The Rev. Atkinson was pastor of First Parish Church for many years.

As in the past, babysitting assistance will be provided after 3 p.m.

The Red Cross has experienced a slight decrease in blood donations this summer despite the usual increased need for blood during these months. Cohasset's own Blood Drive in May was much lower than in January, dropping to 88 accepted donors from a prior level of 113.

To make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, please call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290.

Lunch with Laroche slated

Acclaimed speaker, educator and humorist Loretta LaRoche will present a special keynote speech, "How to Prevent Hardening of the Attitude" Thursday, Sept. 14, at the Chart House in Cohasset. The luncheon event will benefit the South Shore Community Center and the Cohasset Council on Aging.

LaRoche teaches workshops and seminars throughout the country and recently appeared on her own live telecast, "The Joy of Stress" on WGBH-TV. She is known for her ability to educate and motivate her audiences through laughter.

Tickets for the lunch are talk are $25. Call 383-0088 or 545-5462 to make reservations. Space is limited.

Village park dedication set

Ship Cove Park will be dedicated Saturday, Sept. 9, at 10 a.m. The park is located in Cohasset Village between Tedeschi's market and French Memories Bakery.

The project was managed by Hubert Vanderlugt of Hub Shipping, with assistance from Edward Mulvey of the Pilgrim Co-operative Bank and the Village Renaissance Committee.

The final mural on the brick wall was designed and painted by Jessica Hurley, assisted by Danielle Copozzoli, Stephanie Lubitz and Holly Pereria, all of Cohasset High School. The students were directed by art teacher Tom Sippel.

Walking tours are planned

The Cohasset Historical Commission will present two walking tours of Cohasset's most historic areas. On Sunday, Sept. 17, the 1995 "Harborwalk" will tour the town's maritime area, once the site of a thriving shipbuilding and fishing industry. Altogether, Cohasset's maritime industry provided work for the majority of the town's working people during the "age of the sail." Shipbuilding began at "Ship Cove," now Cohasset harbor, in the early 1700s and continued until the late 19th century.

On Sunday, Oct. 1, a walking tour of historic Cohasset Common and the village center is planned.

On both tours some of the finest examples of early architecture in the town may be seen. Both tours will meet at the Historical Society's Maritime Museum, Cohasset Center, at 2 p.m. on the scheduled days, and the Society's curator will conduct both walks. There is no charge for the tours, but donations at the museum are welcome.

Teen center reopens Sept. 8

The Cohasset Teen Center, located at 24 South Main St., will reopen following a short summer vacation break on Friday, Sept. 8. The Center will be open from 7 to 10 p.m. for seventh-graders only on this day. Admission is free and all seventh-graders are welcome.

The usual activities available at the center will be available, and there will be pizza and a movie to celebrate the special opening event.

On Saturday, Sept. 9, an eight-grader night will be held, also with pizza and a movie, from 7 to 10 p.m.

On Friday, Sept. 15, all Cohasset seventh-, eighth- and ninth-graders will be welcomed at the center from 7 to 10 p.m. The Center has added a pool table and a pinball machine, both generously donated by members of the community.

The teen center is totally supported by community contributions, and the board, Cohasset Youth Resources, has expressed appreciation to community members and organizations who have supported the center/

Chamber seeks to meet needs of local businesses

Bring a friend special Sept. 20 at Chart House

BY JAMES LOEWENSTEIN
Special to the Cohasset Mariner

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce promotes local businesses, represents them and acts as their advocate.

But it has been several years since the Chamber gathered business persons together to ask for feedback on how the organization is doing and whether the Chamber should be doing anything differently, said Chamber spokesman Dean Rizzo.

On Sept. 20, the Chamber will hold a meeting to do just that, he said.

At the meeting, businesses will have the opportunity to suggest "programs they might like to see implemented" by the Chamber, said Bob Martin, a director of the group.

The meeting will allow the organization "to get back in touch" with businesses and "see if we're heading in the right direction," said Rizzo, who is also a member of the Chamber's board of directors.

The gathering, which will be held at the Chart House at 44 Border Street, is also intended to increase membership, he said. Business persons who are not members will have an opportunity to learn about the organization and "voice opinions on what they would like to see us do," he said.

Currently, 118 businesses — about half the businesses in town — are members of the Chamber, he said.

"We have an excellent membership base for the size of this town," Martin said.

Membership has been "staying pretty constant" for the past several years, although it has "increased slightly this past year," Rizzo said.

"We have a government liaison who attends all selectmen and planning board meetings," he said. The liaison represents the Chamber of Commerce as well as the needs and concerns of the town's business community.

"One of the purposes of the meeting is to let businesses know we are a voice for them," Rizzo said. "It's up to them to use the voice."

The Chamber, which is a non-profit organization, helps businesses resolve issues related to the town, he said.

Recently, the Chamber published an insert in the local papers which listed tradespeople in Cohasset, he said. The insert let residents know what services are available locally, he added. The Chamber is also planning to publish similar inserts for professionals and retail businesses.

The business group has also published an advertisement in Location Magazine which promotes Cohasset "as a great place" to shoot movies and commercials, he said. The magazine is distributed to movie producers and film companies.

In the past decade, two major movies were shot in Cohasset, "Witches of Eastwick," and "House Sitter," with Steve Martin, Rizzo said.

The Chamber also recently distributed booklets promoting Cohasset as a destination for day trips, he said.

In addition, the business group helped produce a 1995 street map of Cohasset which promotes local businesses.

The Chamber also holds an annual auction of goods and services donated by residents and businesses, such as a haircut or a restaurant meal, Rizzo said. The proceeds from last year's auction were donated to the Appalachian Service Club, in which Cohasset residents have participated as volunteers, and to the annual HarborFest, he said.

The Chamber also sponsors a Candidates' Night, which features debates between candidates prior to a town election, Rizzo said.

In addition, the business group sends "care" packages to college students from Cohasset which have included pens, paper, a subscription to the Cohasset Mariner and a tote bag, he said.

Businesses contribute to Cohasset in a number of important ways, said James Lagrotteria, chairman of the Board of Assessors

They pay about 9 percent of some $12 million in property taxes raised by the town each year, he said. But they make an even bigger contribution as a source of employment, he said.

About 5 percent of Cohasset is zoned for commercial use, said Bob Egan, building inspector.

Each business that is member of the Chamber of Commerce pays $75 in annual dues.

Each current member who brings a prospective member to the Sept. 20 meeting will receive a free meal for both them and their guest, the Chamber said.

For further information on the meeting, call Dean Rizzo at 383-1994, Elsa Miller at 383-2626, or the Chamber Hotline at 383-1010.

Chamber overview is slated

An overview of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce will be given at the group's Wednesday, Sept. 20, meeting at the Chart House. An hour of networking and hors d'oeuvres will precede dinner at 6:30 p.m.

The overview will include the Chamber's operating committees, the benefits of Chamber membership and information on the group's recent activities. Guests will have an opportunity to present their ideas on how the Chamber can better serve them and their businesses.

Any current member who brings a prospective member will receive a free meal for both. The menu will include salad, stuffed chicken with pasta and vegetables and dessert. Reservations are required.

Current members who need a "guest," or prospective members needing "hosts," and anyone who would like to make reservations may call Dean Rizzo at 383-1994, Elsa Miller at 383-2626 or the Chamber hotline at 383-1010.

A Tradition Continues

The Cohasset Assemblies

Mr. Donald Mason and the Committee for the Cohasset Assemblies announce that the invitations for the 1995-96 season have been mailed. The Assemblies, formerly directed by Mr. and Mrs. John C. Nott, are a series of dance classes for Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Grades designed to introduce youngsters to the basics of social dance and etiquette. The classes also include contemporary dances, party dances and dance games with prizes to make the Assemblies a fun way for youngsters to learn and practice social skills with their peers.

The sessions are held on Tuesdays, starting on October 3, 1995. Grade Five will meet from 4:15-5:15 p.m., and Grade Six from 5:30-6:30 p.m. The Seventh Grade will meet from 7:30-8:30 p.m. for four evening Dance Parties: November 7 and December 5, 1995/ and January 30 and March 5, 1996.

The Assemblies are very popular and fill up quickly. Subscriptions must necessarily be limited, therefore, will be accepted in the order in which they are received.

If you have not received an invitation, please call Mr. Mason: 617-734-3447; Committee Chairperson, Patricia Leahy: 383-1005; Rhonda Corey Myers, Fifth Grade: 383-2969; or Martha Equi, Seventh Grade: 383-0461.

The Grand Tour

with Ginger Ferenz 383-2863

The Andrews' residence at 2 Black Horse Lane has taken full advantage of the summer sun by adding a deck surrounded by white railings and a second-floor balcony with white flower boxes filled with salmon-colored geraniums. A mixed perennial border gives summertime color to the yard where a dark green- and white-striped cushion sits on the chaise matching the sun umbrella on the deck. Bright yellow Coreopsis and white Asiatic lilies fill the border.

Survey shows train wanted

Eighty-six percent say Boston commute is a problem

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

The results of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce transportation survey are in and a clear majority of South Shore residents polled want restoration of commuter rail along the Old Colony Greenbush line.

The Chamber hired Atlantic Marketing Research Co. Inc. of Boston to conduct a 23-question telephone survey of 400 randomly chosen Greenbush corridor residents in Hingham, Weymouth, Scituate, Cohasset and in the communities adjacent to the corridor, Norwell, Marshfield and Hull.

The results show that 61 percent of those polled favor or strongly favor rail restoration, while only 18 percent oppose building the line with the remainder are uncertain or neutral on the issue. Seventy-one percent polled agreed commuter rail would speed their commute into Boston (only 15 percent disagree); 59 percent say commuter rail will make the South Shore a more attractive place to live (26 percent disagree); and an overwhelming 75 percent polled said it will make commuting into Boston more pleasant. Fifty-seven percent said they would favor a state-sponsored referendum on the issue.

Terry Fancher, general manager of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, said there were several things the chamber wanted to achieve with the survey — the first being to insure it was done objectively. Atlantic Marketing was chosen to conduct

Officials grapple with Osgood growing pains

By DAVID JOHNSON
Special to the Mariner

An unexpected surge in enrollment has filled the Osgood Elementary School to capacity, prompting concerned school officials to speculate that portable classrooms may have to be used to provide additional class space next year.

At last week's school committee meeting school committee vice chairman Nancy Sandell said that residents should understand that if enrollment increases again next year, then portable classrooms will be a possibility at Osgood.

Portable classrooms will not be a capital expense, but would come out of the

The town-owned Hagerty property off Parker Avenue could become the site of a second marine educational center in as many years.

Cohasset's Week

School year began smoothly

School opened successfully last week for Cohasset's 1230 students, according to supt. Stephen Hart.

"If I don't hear any major problems, I assume it went smoothly," he told the school committee last week.

He reported that the addition of a fifth bus route was a big factor in reducing overcrowding on buses for the lower grade levels. More high school students drive to school.

Among the other improvements discussed during the school committee meeting, were the newly renovated high school bathrooms.

School committee vice chairman Nancy Sandell urged students to keep their facilities free of graffiti, noting that bathrooms are the one area of the school seen by more visitors.

"When the community comes into the school for town meeting or a function, they go into the bathroom, not the classroom. It leaves an impression," she said.

Brush, structure fire fought

The fire department this week responded to two fires of suspicious origin, Fire Chief Roger W. Lincoln said.

At 11:10 a.m. Monday (Sept. 11), the fire department responded to a brush fire on the old railway bed behind the old highway department garage in the village parking lot.

"While there, we got a call that there was smoke in the area of the railroad bed near the Osgood School," Lincoln said.

As it turned out the fire was not near Osgood but was at the old pump house which abuts the old rail bed behind the gravel pit off Sohier Street, he said.

Both fires are under investigation.

Hazardous waste day slated

The Cohasset Board of Health will host a Hazardous Waste Collection Day from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., Sept. 30 at the Swim Center off Sohier Street across from the Osgood School. For more information, please call the health board office at 383-9900.

Mary Gainor steps down

Selectmen will send a letter to Mary Gainor, 168 Sohier Street, thanking her for her many years of service on the By-Law Committee.

Gainor recently stepped down from the committee after serving 21 years.

"She did a super job," said Selectman Martha Gjesteby.

"(We accept her resignation) with great regret and thanks for her years of service," Selectman Jane Goedecke said.

Brush chipping slated at RTF

Brush chipping at the Cedar Street Recycling Transfer Facility is slated for Sept. 16-18. Brush will be accepted from Cohasset residents only.

The following restrictions apply: Place brush as directed by the RTF manager; no hedge trimmings or stumps will be accepted; no length restrictions apply. For further information call the RTF at 383-9627.

"That's commitment for you," Selectman Michael H. Sullivan said after learning that Gainor has served on the by-law committee since 1974.

Step-rate increase okay'ed

Selectmen approved a step-rate salary increase this week for Police Sgt. Richard G. Abbadessa, whose annual pay will go from $32,038 to $32741, effective Oct. 4.

License agreement approved

This week selectmen approved execution of a license agreement between the town and Kim-Rich Realty Trust (DiNero's restaurant on Hull Street) to allow the restaurant to construct a wheelchair-access ramp which would be partially on town property.

Swim center traffic control

As proposed by town Safety Officer Clifton Jones, the town will install a portable speed bump and stop sign at the Cohasset Swim Center, selectmen said this week.

Earlier this summer, the recreation commission asked that police investigate traffic control at Sohier Street and the drive leading to the swim center.

"Vehicles often enter and exit the swim center drive at a fairly high rate of speed, causing us great concern, due to the proximity of our Playground Program children and our frequent walks to the swim center, Music Circus, and Deer Hill," Recreation Department Director Jack Worley wrote in a memo to selectmen.

Commissioners suggested that a speed bump a few feet in on the swim center drive might slow speedy entrances and exits.

Jones told selectmen Monday that highway Supt. Harold Litchfield was against a permanent speed bump because it would make the drive impossible to plow.

Jones said he concurred with Litchfield's suggestion of a portable speed bump and also asked that a stop sign be installed so that all vehicles will be required to stop before exiting the swim center driveway.

New storage shed gets nod

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation, which oversees the Minot Ledge Light keepers' Residence on Government Island will construct a 12x14-ft. storage shed on the grounds about halfway down the connecting road to the Ed Young Parking Lot and butted up against the base of Beacon Rock.

"The storage shed is needed for chairs and tables, trash, and garden and maintenance equipment including a lawn mower," CLC president Joseph McElroy explained.

Endorsing the proposal, selectmen said this week that the post-and-beam shed is a good solution to the storage problems at the house.

Historic district is reviewed

The Secretary of the Commonwealth, William Francis Galvin, has announced that eight historic resources across the state were reviewed for listing in the National Register of Historic Places on Sept. 13 at the Attleboro Public Library.

The properties include the Cohasset Common Historic District. Nominations to the National Register are made in the Commonwealth by the Massachusetts Historical Commission, a division of the Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Eighty-six percent say Boston commute is a problem

the survey because of its excellent reputation, Fancher said. Atlantic's list of clients include the Massachusetts Bankers Association, CVS, the state Executive Office of Transportation and Construction (EOTC) and the MBTA itself.

According to Fancher, Atlantic has conducted five separate transportation surveys for the "T" making it an especially good choice for the chamber's study. The results have been forwarded to Governor Weld and Secretary of Transportation James Kerasiotes, he said.

Fancher said the chamber wanted to get some clear answers on the Greenbush issue and to give Weld and Kerasiotes tools they could work with. The survey is accurate because it is random, said Fancher, who noted that politicians use this form of polling.

"We're giving them a survey that's acceptable because it's the same way they would do things," he said.

Commuters were clearly targeted in the survey which showed that 86 percent of those polled found getting in and out of Boston to be a problem. Seventy percent of the respondents commute into Boston and 92 percent currently travel by car.

The questions were in depth ranging from commuting times and locations for those polled; to how they would rate on a scale from one to five current commuting conditions into Boston; and how they obtained the information that helped them form their opinion on the issue.

Questions focusing on alternatives to at grade rail restoration were also posed in the survey including rail with a tunnel under Hingham Square and a guided busway system along the Greenbush right of way. On the tunnel option the vote was close, with 38 percent opposing or strongly opposing the tunnel option and 30 percent in favor of it. The controversial busway concept — which neither rail opponents nor proponents endorsed — fared poorly, with 51 percent opposing or strongly opposing it and just 21 percent in favor. There were no questions on the survey addressing commuter boat or feeder bus options.

Early local reaction to the survey was varied.

"The results reflect our feelings and the true spirit out there," said rail supporter and Back on Track founder, William Grimes.

Grimes said he was very pleased by the results of the survey and said he hopes the decision makers will take heed.

"I hope the administration takes a good hard look at this. This is where the real feeling is," he said.

But Coastal Coalition member Ilana Marks of Scituate maintained that the study will have little influence on the Weld administration.

"They've realized it's too expensive. They recognize it will be too much of a burden to tax payers when there are viable alternatives we should be focusing on," she said.

Marks was critical of the survey itself for omitting questions on commuter boat service, for not limiting the polling to residents in towns where the line would run, and for leaving Braintree out altogether.

"I would have like to have seen questions on the boats. It shows bias not to include them," she said.

Marine research center floated for Hagerty site

facility in the house.

Margin Street resident Kevin Ulmer, who holds a doctorate in biological oceanography, told selectmen Monday that the primary mission of the center "will be to enhance and augment" the science education program for Cohasset students and those from surrounding towns.

Up and running is the Cohasset Maritime Institute, a non-profit organization headed by Cohasset teacher Jack Buckley, who leases the antique boat house on the Hagerty property and uses it as an educational center supporting rowing and its history.

The subject of the showroom came up during a discussion this week on plans for the two-acre parcel which the town bought 2-1/2 years ago. The Hagerty committee excluded the Victorian house from its plans for the site.

Paul Trendowicz, owner of Cohasset Harbor Marina on Parker Avenue, has offered to buy the house and use it as a ship's chandlery and office.

Selectman Jane Goedecke suggested that the Hagerty Committee hold a public forum during which the various options for the house and plan for recreational use of the land could be presented to the public.

The Hagerty Committee has come up with a recreational plan including parking lot, green space and walkway to the adjacent Government Island.

This week residents Herbert Towle and Herbert Jason proposed filling in the marsh between Government Island and the Hagerty Property as a way to gain more useable land and adding finger floats along Bailey's Creek which runs between the shoreline and Bassings Beach.

"It's either the citizens of the town or grass — the grass has to go," Jason said.

Hagerty members Vee Roebuck and Max Pounder were not optimistic that permitting could be obtained to fill in the marsh land but agreed to arrange a meeting. Towle's drawing depicting filled-in marsh land is on display in the planning board office along with a rendering of the Hagerty committee's suggested recreational plan for the site.

Greenbush decision delay angers transportation activists

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

While both rail opponents and proponents are still reeling this week from the Weld administration's decision to go back to the drawing board on Greenbush, local legislators and Greenbush activists had strong responses to yet another delay in the process of finding a feasible, efficient, palatable and affordable transportation option for the coastal South Shore.

State Senator Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth) and other local legislators met with state Transportation Secretary James Kerasiotes Monday (Sept. 11), the day the circumspect guided busway study was released. Hedlund said very little was said about the busway plan, an alternative that rail opponents and proponents agreed was undesirable and inefficient.

Hedlund said the busway is something the MBTA wants to pursue as a technology of the future, but is not ready for it yet, in this application. Personally, Hedlund maintained, "I don't think the busway is feasible."

Other alternatives currently on the table include a plan to build the Greenbush line with the terminus in Hingham near the South Shore Country Club and construction a spur of the Plymouth branch from Weymouth to the Route 228 and Route 3 interchange in Rockland.

While Hedlund vehemently opposes the first plan as one not worth the capital costs and a threat to the tranquility of Bare Cove Park and the many residents of Conservatory Park, an up-scale housing subdivision off Fort Hill Street in Hingham, he said the latter alternative warrants some looking into.

"It makes a lot of sense," said Hedlund, who noted the particularly good timing with the planning for possible reuses of the South Weymouth Naval Air Station.

"A right of way through the base would involve minimal land taking and fewer people impacted and only one grade crossing," he said.

Hedlund also believes such a spur could save Greenbush commuters time. With all of the grade crossings and stops along the Greenbush right of way, Hedlund maintained that commuters could save time by driving to the new interchange in Rockland and catching the train there.

One of the drawbacks to the plan, Hedlund acknowledged was the increase in volume of traffic on side streets as Greenbush commuters cut through other towns. Feeder buses would diminish that problem, Hedlund noted.

Pro- and anti-train sides agree

'I would like to see it (Greenbush) come to a resolution from a political standpoint so I don't have to deal with it anymore.'
— Sen. Robert Hedlund

Like his constituents, Hedlund said he too is frustrated by the delays and will push to get the alternatives studied and a decision made.

"I would like to see it come to a resolution from a political stand point so I don't have to deal with it anymore," he said.

As to concerns that a lawsuit filed by the Conservation Law Foundation if Greenbush is not built, Hedlund said public policy should not be determined by the threat of lawsuits.

In 1991, the state entered into an agreement with CLF whose lawsuit under the federal Clean Air Act threatened to tie up construction on the central artery project unless there was a another state project that would bring about reduction in auto emissions and air pollution to make up for the increase in both when the "big dig" is completed. The state has until Dec. 31, 1996 to restore commuter rail or come up with a suitable alternative, before CLF again files suit.

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) also shares her constituents frustrations.

"I'm fed up," she said. "Why don't they make a decision?"

Murray, who has suggested the ammunition depot on Fort Hill Street as the terminus for a shorter Greenbush line, said she'll be watching all of the alternatives on the table very carefully.

"I'm going to listen to the people in my district and continue to try to protect my district whatever way I can," she said.

Murray said she was very upset that she was not notified in advance about the meeting Monday with Kerasiotes and when she learned of it was unable to attend.

Of the state transportation decision-makers Murray said: "they have to fish or cut bait. They're letting people's lives hang in mid air and it's not right."

Coastal Coalition founder Nancy Buckley said she too is frustrated but maintained that the delay is validating what her group has been saying all along.

"The train isn't the answer. There must be a better idea," she said.

Buckley criticized the plan to build the line with a terminus in Hingham, "nothing but an elitist idea that says to heck with Braintree, Weymouth and Hingham — we'll save the historic district, Cohasset and Scituate."

On building a Plymouth line spur over to Rockland, Buckley said she has always been an advocate of some sort of transit down Route 3 whether it be rail, monorail or a busway system.

"The boats can do the jobs themselves," said Buckley who maintained the Coastal Coalition is anti-right-of-way, not anti-rail.

"We want a no right of way decision," she added.

William Grimes, a staunch rail supporter and founder of Back on Track, dismissed all of the alternatives being discussed and said that commuter rail is the only way to provide good transportation down here and end this "hellish commute."

"None of the alternatives kicking around are any good to anyone," Grimes said.

"The bus is dead on arrival and ending the train here (Hingham) doesn't help folks in Cohasset, Scituate and Marshfield," he added.

One positive Grimes noted was the persistence of the press which seems to have gotten under Governor William Weld's skin.

"He's listening to us during his swings through the state occasionally and he's trying to do the thing that is the least politically damaging."

Grimes alluded to further studies underway, in addition to the South Shore Chamber of Commerce survey, that will provide the governor with statistics and hard facts putting the rail opposition in perspective and showing him that "you may be a good listener, but you're not hearing. The majority of people want the train."

Bringing the tunnel option back to the table is another objective for Grimes who pointed out that only Kerasiotes has said he's against the tunnel.

Grimes would like to see a summit meeting with Kerasiotes and Weld in which all rail factions can sit down and come to the same compromise they reached earlier — the short tunnel option.

While building the 3/4 mile under Hingham's down-town historic area would add about $100 million to the project costs, Grimes said it is something everyone can live with.

"We can all go away happy. Mr. Macmillan can say he saved the town; I can say I have transportation, local legislators can say they did what was in the best interest of the town; the chamber of commerce can say they've helped the economy of the area; and the merchants in the Square can say they've brought order to the mess.

"Everyone could win on this," he said.

Grimes said with the Governor backed into a corner, the tunnel compromise could give him way out.

Milliken Field condition gets passing marks

Sprinkler heads had posed safety problem

By JAMES LOEWENSTEIN
Special to the Cohasset Mariner

Over the last several weeks, Milliken Field had not been considered completely safe to play on, but now the field has been vastly improved, officials say.

On Sept. 7, Director of Athletics Clark Chatterton had told the Cohasset School Committee that the field, on which the junior-senior high school soccer and football teams will play this fall, was in an "almost dangerous" condition.

He said a boys' varsity soccer game, scheduled for Sept. 11, had been postponed to Sept. 15, mostly due to the condition of the field.

Players could come in contact with newly installed sprinkler heads, which lie just below the surface, because they were surrounded by loose soil, he said.

The sprinkler heads are metal, but are shielded by plastic caps, he said.

The sprinkler system, which was installed at the beginning of August, had not been working, he said. Consequently, no grass had grown around the heads, which would have "firmed up" the area, he said.

Water from the sprinkler system would have also compacted the soil, making the field safer, he said.

And no rain had fallen over the past several weeks to help solve the problem, he said.

The sprinkler system was installed as part of a project that includes the construction of a multi-purpose game field and track at the school and an upgrading of other facilities.

There was a delay in getting the sprinkler system to work because the water pressure was unexpectedly low and electricity had to be brought in to operate a pump for boosting water pressure, said Wayne Sawchuk, a member of the Milliken Field Committee and a volunteer clerk-of-the-works for the project.

But last weekend, the sprinkler finally began working, Sawchuk said.

The area around the sprinklers has "all been compacted and remedied," said Robert Delmonico, president of R.A.D. Corporation, the primary contractor on the project.

He said the soil had been compacted with a mechanical rolling machine after the sprinkler system began working.

When asked if the field is now safe, Sawchuk said, "I think it's all set now."

He said the areas around the sprinkler heads are "not in an unsafe condition right now."

He said he hoped the fields' surface, which had become "very, very hard" due to the lack of rain, will become softer now that the sprinklers are working.

Chatterton said there has been a "one hundred percent improvement" in the field's condition over last week.

He said he hoped grass would now grow in around the sprinkler heads to cushion those areas more.

No one has been injured on the field, officials say.

Snack shack proposed for new sports field

By JAMES LOEWENSTEIN
Special to the Cohasset Mariner

The multi-purpose game field and track being built at the junior-senior high school may get a concession stand.

It is possible that an unused storage area behind the junior-senior high school could be converted to a concession stand and bathrooms for use during games, said School Committee Chairman Ralph Kidder at the board's Sept. 7 meeting.

The concession stand/bathroom facility would be located next to a corner of the field and would be within the fence surrounding the field and track, he said.

It will be "perfectly situated for use by fans," said Kidder, who is the committee's representative to the field construction committee.

If the one-story storage area were developed, officials would not need to open up the school during games to let fans use the bathrooms, he said.

For security reasons, it would be better to not have people walking through the school during games, said committee vice chair Nancy Sandell.

The concession stand/bathroom facility would "only be open during games," Kidder said.

Funds appropriated by Town Meeting for construction of the track and field would be used for the conversion of the storage area, Kidder said.

Until now, there have been no plans for constructing a concession stand because not enough funds were appropriated by Town Meeting to build one from scratch, he said.

He said the conversion would be cheaper than building a facility from scratch because the structure already exists, and it has plumbing and electricity.

However, Kidder said there may be problems with converting the storage area. The area may not have enough space to accommodate the bathrooms, he said.

The ceiling of the structure may also be too low, he said.

But, he said, "I anticipate (the structure) will be suitable."

The proposal already has the backing of the field construction committee, he said.

Members of the school committee reacted positively to the proposal.

They authorized Superintendent Stephen Hart to assist the construction committee in determining whether the conversion is feasible.

The conversion would have to be approved by the Cohasset Board of Health, and may have to be reviewed by several other town boards, Kidder said.

The alternative to constructing bathrooms in the storage area would be either opening up the school or using port-o-johns, he said.

School plans to be aired

Voters at the November special town meeting will hear a report on the study of school facilities, which might include options for either a new school building or repair of the Osgood Elementary School.

School committee chairman Ralph Kidder said last week that town meeting could be asked to appropriate more money to continue the study. At the very least, town meeting will receive an update, which was required by the last year's town meeting vote authorizing a study.

Kidder also said that the grade configuration could be changed, with the creation of a middle school for grades 6 - 8. A new middle school building could be proposed, he said.

He said that planning must be underway now, since the Osgood school is out of date and crowded, while school enrollment is growing.

Beechwood ball park fund-raiser hits a home run

Hey, mark those calendars! The Cohasset Education Foundation is sponsoring a fund-raiser for its "Language Lab Project" from 4 to 7 p.m., Sunday, Oct. 1 at the South Shore Art Center.

The event is an opportunity to meet the principals of the three Cohasset schools, to learn more about what's new in the school system, and to hear the accomplished talents of several of our students. Refreshments will include foods with an international flavor sponsored by the PSO's Diversity Committee.

Tickets are available from Rick Flynn (383-6754) or Kevin O'Donnell (383-6113) or from any CEF directors.

The Beechwood Ball Park (Pratt Memorial Park) fund-raiser hit a home run.

The goal of $1,300 in contributions given by area residents has been collected. This will be used for landscaping and beautification of the ball park, under the direction of the Cohasset tree and park department. Work will begin in September or October. Maintenance money will be needed as an ongoing part of this project, so keep that in mind as you see the park get prettier and prettier.

Nancy Snowdale was the impetus behind this great idea, she wants to thank all that helped it become a reality. We think that everyone should thank Nancy for making the park and the town even prettier than before. If you want to be part of the "maintenance crew," please give her a call at 383-1298.

Happy belated birthday greetings go to Bill Corriveau from his family and friends. We hear that there was a nice birthday party held to honor the occasion, hope all had a super time! And that your year will bring lots of good things Bill!

The Cohasset High School soccer teams are holding their annual soccer breakfast this Sunday (Sept. 17) at the Deer Hill School from 8 a.m. to noon. There are so many good cooks that gather for the event, people always leave saying they have never had better pancakes! And, you'll get to meet team members and their folks.

This is the only benefit that is held by the soccer teams, so why not help fulfill their dreams while you fill your tummies? See any team member for tickets, or get them at the door.

Michael Christoffel, a sophomore at Cohasset Junior/Senior High School, is a Young Scholar in the Brandeis Summer Odyssey program at Brandeis University in Waltham. Studying artificial intelligence, Michael is carrying out research in computer science.

He is the son of John and Beth Christoffel of Fair Oaks Lane.

The Young Scholars Program is funded by the National Science Foundation to encourage talented high school students to pursue careers in science, mathematics and engineering.

Do you remember how excited we all were last February when they completed the work at Ship Cove Park (the space between Tedeschi's and French Memories)? Hope you have noticed that the final mural is up, and that it is a wonderful one.

All of the seasons are there, and the wall looks great. Unfortunately, not all of us seem to appreciate its beauty! Papers and trash are littering it, who is using it as a trash barrel, destroying its beauty? After all of the efforts to put this park into something we were all proud of, it seems a shame to see it in this state! We have seen some of the people who work in the area stop and pick up the litter, but these efforts aren't enough! Perhaps the art students could paint an attractive barrel to put there, in the hopes that the "litterers" would use it? Or maybe, if you see some junk in the park, you could pick it up? Or, use the existing barrel? Whatever, appreciate it and make an effort to keep it clean, it is a reflection on the whole town!

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers' Club will host the club's first social event of the season Saturday, Sept. 23. Members and friends are invited to a wine and cheese party from 5:30 to 7 30 p.m. in a member's home. The party is a great way

Edward C. Dolph

Edward Clark Dolph, 66, of Phoenix, Arizona, died Aug. 14.

For the past several years Mr. Dolph was a resident of Flagstaff, Arizona. He was a writer and woodworker.

Mr. Dolph was a graduate of Wesleyan University and a World War II veteran.

He was the husband of Jane Bacigalupo Dolph of Cohasset and leaves two sons, E. Cyrus Dolph and Sam Dolph, both of Cohasset, two daughters, Mimi Adkins of Madison, Conn. and Lili Madsen of Glen Ellyn, Il., and a sister, Susan Tinsman of Lumberville, Penn.

The funeral service and burial took place on Friday, Aug. 25, at the VA National Cemetery in Bourne, Mass.

The Rev. Mother Gayatri Devi

The Rev. Mother Gayatri Devi, 88, of Cohasset, a teacher for 55 years of Vedanta, the Indian philosophy which honors all the world religions, died Sept. 8 in South Shore Hospital, South Weymouth.

The Rev. Mother Devi came to America from her native East Bengal, India, in 1926 at age 19 to join her uncle, Swami Paramanda, who established the Boston Vedanta Center in 1909 to teach the principle of equality between men and women, East and West, monastics and lay followers.

Swami Paramanda, who also formed the Ananda Ashrama in La Crescenta, Calif., the Cohasset center on Beechwood Street in 1929, appointed The Rev. Mother Devi his successor and she took over leadership when he died in 1940.

The Rev. Mother Devi was called "Ma" by followers at the Cohasset Center who said she was contemplative and shy. She guided her followers as the mother of a large family, welcoming all to the wooded Cohasset grounds and temple without any formal membership.

They said she showed her warmth and caring through cooking for and feeding her followers as well as through teaching and giving spiritual instruction.

The Cohasset temple was built under her direction from native stones and boards milled from oak trees felled in the 1958 hurricane.

The Rev. Mother Devi was a founder of the Snowmass Religious Leaders Conference, an ecumenical group of spiritual leaders seeking to broaden understanding among religious traditions and their followers.

She represented her faith at the Conference of World Religions at the United Nations in 1975 where she shared the platform with Mother Theresa, and she was one of five master teachers joining His Holiness, the Dalai Lama, giving meditation instruction at the Harmonia Mundi Contemplative Congress in Newport Beach, Calif., in 1989.

A memorial service will be held at 11 a.m. Sept. 24 at Ananda Ashrama in California, and at 2 p.m. Sept. 24 in the Vedanta Centre in Cohasset.

Donations may be made to the Vedanta Centre Special Fund, 130 Beechwood St., Cohasset 02025.

Take a stand, Gov.

'I'm not indecisive — I'm undecided,' — Gov. William Weld on Greenbush.

Are you as tired of hearing about Greenbush as we are? Probably. We've made thousands of phone calls and written dozens of stories, printed hundreds of letters, and covered innumerable meetings and countless hearings on the subject over the years.

In Hingham, we've been the object of a negative sticker campaign because of our pro-train editorial stance. And we've answered dozens of angry phone calls from those who don't share our view.

But what is as disconcerting to us — and no doubt to all of you on both sides of the issue — is that an answer to our transportation problems seems to be more elusive than ever.

We are deeply disappointed that Governor William Weld is so reluctant to take a stand on the issue. It certainly appears that his administration is trying to judge which way the political wind is blowing before standing up for the train or for that matter, any other transportation solution.

We might accept Weld's appalling lack of leadership on this issue — if he'd promise us that he is committed to our region.

And although they're in the opposing camp, we count on our legislators Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray and Sen. Robert Hedlund to keep pounding on the Governor's door.

Don't let the Governor drop the ball, please.

If the Governor wants to air every transportation alternative under the sun, he could at least assure us that we won't ultimately be forgotten.

We may be tired of the Greenbush issue — but we haven't given up. We remain convinced that the train is the best solution to the South Shore's critical transportation problems.

We are heartened by the results of the recent survey sponsored by the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. We have long thought that the state has overestimated opposition to the train which could provide fast, convenient and efficient commuter transportation for the South Shore well into the next century.

But we think that all of us can agree if the Greenbush line isn't restored — we want guarantees from the top that considerable resources will be spent on a workable transportation alternative.

We're tired of waiting for answers. No more decade-long studies, please.

We have a right to fast, efficient public transportation. The future economic health of our town and region depend on it.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Fund-raiser support is appreciated

To the Editor:

The George H. Mealy Post #118 of the American Legion would like to take this opportunity to thank the following fine merchants and members who made the Christina Burke Scholarship clambake a great success. As you know, we raise money to help students who go on to further education.

We thank the following merchants: Charlotte's, Robbins Garage, Leo's Exxon, Cards and Shards, Liquors Unlimited, Reed's Nursery, Jamie's Pub, the Hingham Lobster Pound, Cohasset Hardware, Carousel Antiques, Sweet Surprises, French Memories, Chart House, Brass Lantern, Village Gourmet, Wilbur's North, and the many members who donated items. Without them and the people who came Saturday we would not have had a successful clambake and raffle table.

We also would like to extend a thank you hand to Alco Oil Company for help on clean-up crew. The following members deserve a high five: Jack Burke, Eddie Brennock, Bruce Butman, Bill Malone, Duncan McCormack, Martin St. John, and the many others who helped put on a fine day.

Most of all, the guests enjoyed a relaxing day at the beach listening to the great sounds of "The Irish Volunteers" and the spinning sounds of "D.J." Jay Fiori.

Making strides against breast cancer

To the Editor:

When someone we love is stricken with breast cancer, we feel deep concern as well as a frustration at not quite knowing how to help. Sunday, Sept. 24, thousands of women who have battled breast cancer will gather at the Hatch Shell in Boston for the American Cancer Society's Making Strides Against Breast Cancer walk. They will be joined by family members and friends to raise funds for the American Cancer Society's breast cancer programs while paying tribute to mothers, grandmothers, aunts, sisters and co-workers who have fought this disease.

The funds raised at the walk will support breast cancer research, educational programs and services in our local community. Free transportation will be available for all walkers from Quincy and Canton. To reserve your seat on a bus or to obtain additional information, call your local American Cancer Society at (617) 341-4210. Join me Sept. 24, as we move past our frustration and into hope for a cure.

Accountability is theme of school reforms

By STEVE ADAMS
Cohasset Mariner

Teachers and students alike will become more accountable for their performance during the coming school year thanks to provisions of education reform.

"This is the year that really the substance of reform is really going to come into play," said Education Secretary Michael Sentance.

School districts across the state are translating the curriculum framework contained in the Common Core of Learning, which could be approved by the state Board of Education this month, into concrete programs of study.

Local school districts also need to approve new performance standards for teachers reflecting a set of principles approved by the state Board of Education in June.

"In many districts, I think it will simply mean sitting down and evaluating the performance standards and making sure they include the principles," said Robert J. Murphy, president of the Massachusetts Teachers' Association.

It is the first time the state has ever articulated "what it means to be an effective teacher or administrator," according to Education Commissioner Robert V. Antonucci.

The "Principles of Effective Teaching" include effective planning of instruction; remaining up-to-date on curriculum content; monitoring students' understanding and adjusting instruction accordingly; creating a positive learning environment; maintaining appropriate standards of behavior, mutual respect and safety; promotes confidence and perseverance in students; promotes equity and appreciation for diversity; and is constructive and cooperative with parents.

Under Ed reform, lifetime teaching certificates have been replaced by a certificate renewable every five years.

Students will also become more accountable when the new 10th grade assessment tests are launched. By 1999, a passing grade on the 10th grade assessment test will be required for high school graduation.

The Ed Reform law requires the test to be given beginning in 1997 but Murphy said serious questions remain about the format of the test. While some educators are pushing for "performance-based" testing rather than the traditional multiple choice format, Murphy predicted the test will incorporate elements of both approaches.

The first draft of the state's student standards was published in late May and a final draft is expected shortly. The second draft of the math-science curriculum received nationwide acclaim in an American Federation of Teachers study.

"Schools are going to have to take those documents and start to integrate them," Sentance said.

Professional development for teachers will take center stage this year as the legislature requires each district to spend $25 per student on continuing education for teachers. Lawmakers approved $10 million in state tax dollars to fund the program. The extent and quality of professional development programs had varied widely from district to district in the past, Sentance said.

All high schools have been required to eliminate the general track and place those students in academic or occupation-directed programs instead. A school-to-work initiative funded by federal grants is also underway.

Curriculum reform and teacher accountability are key aspects of the upcoming school year, Murphy said.

Cohasset Education Foundation announces grant

By JIM KINCH
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Education Foundation's president Rick Shea has announced the award of a $10,000 grant from the Cohasset Conservation Trust. The grant is in support of the CEF's "Naturalist in Residence Program" for the Osgood and Deer Hill schools.

"This grant is an important opportunity to expand the role for natural science in the elementary curriculum," noted school Superintendent Stephen Hart.

The Naturalist in Residence program is designed to bring a 'hands on' presentation of the local natural environment to the classroom. David Clapp of the Massachusetts Audubon Society will serve as the Naturalist in Residence and will work with the teachers and students to develop a science program and study guide using the two nature trails adjacent to the Deer Hill and Osgood schools.

"The intent is to develop a core program at each school around a living laboratory and to draw on the potential for learning experiences in our own neighborhood. I am very encouraged by the confidence in the Cohasset Schools expressed by the Trust through its gift," explained Hart.

A member of the Trust Board, Deborah Shadd, explained that the Trust reviewed the application carefully and was impressed by the presentation of CEF's Anne Lane.

"We felt the concept fit the goals of the Conservation Trust, and we are very interested in fostering an awareness of the environment in our young people," Shadd said.

The Trust is actively involved in the management of a number of conservation areas and sensitive natural habitats around Cohasset, including Bassing Beach.

"This is the first time the Trust has had an opportunity to directly support an environmental program in the Cohasset Schools, which is an excellent fit with our mission," added Shadd.

The CEF is an independent non-profit organization focused on developing new and non-traditional sources of support for the Cohasset Public School System. People interested in learning more about the mission of the CEF and its activities are encouraged to call 383-2833 or to write to the Cohasset Education Foundation, P.O. Box 224, Cohasset 02025 for a copy of our brochure and additional information on programs. As a registered non-profit organization all donations to the project fund are tax-deductible and dedicated to enhancing the educational environment for Cohasset public school students.

Service project orientation meeting

This town-wide mission program, now in its ninth year, is having its first meeting for the 1996 work camp trip. Tentative dates for the 1996 trip are June 22 to 30. The Appalachia Service Project, Inc. is a home repair project serving the four state region of Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee.

An orientation meeting will be held Sunday, Sept. 17, at the Second Congregational Church from 7:30 to 9 p.m. Interested students in the 10th to 12th grade are encouraged to attend with their parents. Registrations with a $50 deposit will be accepted at the end of the meeting. Ninth-graders are welcome to attend, register and help with fundraisers, but they will be placed on a waiting list until April, 1996, and moved on board, if there is room. There will also be sign-ups for the adults to help on various fundraisers. Watch for the first fundraiser: annual leaf-raking teams; reservations will be taken in October. For further information on the meeting or A.S.P., call Gary Ritts (383-0345), Ami Argus (383-9325) or Pam DeLorenzo (383-6904).

Several members of the Appalachia Service Project work on a home-repair project. An orientation meeting for the 1996 trip is from 7:30 to 9 p.m., Sunday. Sept. 17 at the Second Congregational Church. Call Gary Ritts at 383-0345 for more information.

Officials grapple with Osgood growing pains department's operating budget.

This year officials had expected 402 students at the school, but 421 actually signed up, most of them in the first grade.

School supt. Stephen Hart said the unanticipated increase has forced the creation of an additional first-grade classroom, for a total of five. He said this was done to prevent class sizes of 26 students, which he called inadvisable at that grade level.

"It was just unacceptable to have 26 students (in a class)," he explained. "It is working out well."

The school committee and several parents in the room appeared to agree with him.

The new class is located in the art and music room at Osgood. Those subjects will now be held in a smaller area.

Hart said the school is now operating at capacity and predicted that the increase in numbers of families with young children now apparently moving into Cohasset will generate larger class sizes in coming years.

Hart said that area preschool and realtors will be contacted next year to determine the size of next year's first grade with greater accuracy. Many parents send their children to private kindergartens but enroll them in the public schools for first grade.

The enrollment figures provide a powerful incentive to school officials to proceed with their discussions on a possible new school building. They have been wrestling with possibly reassigning grades between schools and with developing a scenario that will result in the greatest chance of state aid for a new building.

If a plan is approved by the state Department of Education, the state will pay for 40 percent of the cost of a project, which could be either an addition to an existing building or construction of a new facility.

Meanwhile, architects and the school building committee have been surveying school facilities and possible building sites in Cohasset.

But ultimately the school committee will be responsible for deciding what to recommend to town meeting voters.

"We're providing the architects and the school building committee with information and direction," said school committee chairman Ralph Kidder.

Hart went on to report that the state will not reimburse the town for renovations made to the Osgood School for several reasons: the site is only four acres large, a far cry from the 15 acres considered neccssary for a new facility; the building has a wood frame, considered unsafe by current standards; and the building is more than 50 years old.

But, Hart added that the state could be asked to consider a waiver if a specific plan were presented.

School committee member James Kirk felt that keeping the Osgood open was an expensive alternative for the town.

Much of the discussion centered on how grades should be arranged in each building.

The committee may decide not build an elementary school, but rather to seek a separate middle school, for grades five or six, through eight.

This would remove students from Deer Hill, allowing the other elementary grades to locate there. Or a new elementary building could be built.

Currently, pre-kindergarten through grade three are housed at Osgood; grades four through six at Deer Hill and grades seven through 12 at the junior/senior higher school.

Parent council representative Betsy Connolly said she would give the committee a copy of a recent Lesley College study on school space which was adopted by Boston and which she said is considered the latest word on the topic.

"I can't support two buildings any longer," Sandell said, pointing out that it is expensive to maintain duplicate facilities, such as libraries.

Parent Ann Whiteley agreed. "I've heard teachers say how easy it is to share information when they are in the same building. Please consider that," she urged the committee.

Hart said that on the other hand, smaller schools have a family atmosphere.

Educator Donna Harwich agreed that the trend is away from enormous schools. But she noted that "every plan is very different," depending upon circumstances in each community.

She has worked in Chelsea, where the state is paying 95 percent of the cost of replacing all seven schools. Harwich said because there is no space in that city, schools are being remodeled into four or five story structures.

The poorest community in the state, Chelsea is receiving special help, presumably unavailable to Cohasset, because the school system in that city was considered abysmal.

Kidder invited school administrators and teachers to comment on how grades should be divided. Hart was expected to give that information to the school building committee which was scheduled to met Wednesday.

Kidder also suggested that speed is important because a final proposal must be received by the state June 1. Even then, Kidder said the request for money could be put onto a list, making it several years before construction could begin.

There will be a special town meeting in November, which may be asked to appropriate money to continue the study. A final proposal will likely be presented before the annual town meeting next spring.

Community gardeners to meet

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its monthly meeting Tuesday, Sept. 26, at Walton Rodgers Hall in St. Stephen's Parish.

Jan Sacks and Marty Schafer of Carlisle will present the first program this season, Planning a Perennial Garden — From Rare and Unusual to Old Favorites.

Coffee is served at 9 a.m. and the meeting begins at 9:30 p.m.

Costumes program is Oct. 19

The Cohasset Historical Society's Costume Committee will present a special lecture and tea titled "Les Petit Dames de Mode" or "The Little Ladies of Fashion" by designer John R. Burbridge Oct. 19 at 1 p.m. The program will be held at the South Shore Art Center, Ripley Road. Reservations for this unusual event are available for $20 through the Historical Society, and should be made by Oct. 12.

Burbridge, retired senior designer for Priscilla of Boston, is honorary curator of the costume section of the Essex Institute in Salem, has designed and created a modern version of the French fashion dolls that were used by dress designers in the 18th and 19th centuries to display their wares in European courts and later to spread new fashions from France to the United States. The collection of 29" dolls is costumed in exquisite detail. Burbridge's fascinating and informative illustrated lecture provides a glimpse at the style and elegance of a vanished society that was "so grand."

"The wonderful variety of styles and silhouettes within that time span offer — from a designer's point of view — an irresistible challenge," Burbridge said. "Victorian and Edwardian ladies of wealth and position lived in an insulated world quite apart from the real one...surrounded by servants, one assured one's place in the order of things by means of an endless round of social calls and carriage drives, and by the arranging of teas, receptions and dinners."

They "kept an army of dressmakers, ladies' maids, milliners, purveyors of textiles, jewelers, makers of fans, gloves and parasols engaged in a whirlwind of activity to keep Madame and her daughters property turned out for all occasions in fashionable splendor," he said.

Call 383-1434 for more information.

Dr. Paul Raia of the Alzheimer's Association of Eastern Massachusetts will be the featured speaker. He will provide information on current Alzheimer's research, a new care option called "habilitation" and the utilization of support groups and institutions.

To reserve a seat call Claire Brids at 749-4774. Seating is limited.

School Notebook

School calendars are sent

The fundraising committee of the P.S.O. would like to acknowledge the hard work of Kevin and Ann O'Connor on the P.S.O. calendar.

The calendars were mailed out at the end of August.

If you didn't receive a copy, please call Sarah Markert at 383-6124. Each copy of the calendar includes an envelope for P.S.O. donations. Please look for this envelope.

A simple $5 donation will help defray the printing costs of the calendar. If you weren't called during the annual phonathon you may use this envelope to send in a donation of any amount to help support the schools.

PSO help is sought

This school year the P.S.O. will sponsor many different fundraising events. The success of these events requires the work of many individuals with many different talents. If you would like to join a committee for one of these events, or help out in any manner, please call one of the fundraising committee members, Tomi Bukowski, 383-6771, Ed Connolly, 383-1248 or Ellen Sanchez, 383-6911.

Fund-raiser is slated

It's time again for the PSO gift-wrap fundraiser. Students will offer top quality products for sale to family and friends. Fifty percent of all proceeds collected are kept for the schools.

Order dates are Sept. 15-29. Tomi Bukowski can be called for further information, 383-6771.

Mary McPartlin so loves her sister's garden, she has tried to replicate it at her own home in Kingston. She wanted to share it with us and invited me to photograph it for The Grand Tour. The garden is at Ann Leonard's home (53 Elm Street) in the side and backyard areas of the Capt. J. H. Smith House, Circa 1700. As you walk along the path to the backyard, perennial beds border both sides with summertime color. The beds are filled with all shades of pink and white Phlox, purple Coneflower, Black-eyed Susan, bright yellow Coreposis, purple thistle, along with blue and white bell-shaped Balloon Flower. Athletic facility moving along Cohasset's Kyle Bunstein holds the blocking dummy during a running back drill during a Skippers' football practice. Cohasset had a tough time against Hull in the South Shore League Football Jamboree, but hope to rebound in Saturday afternoon's game at West Bridgewater. For more on the team, see pg. 18.

Cohasset Junior/Senior High track athletes can look forward to practicing and hosting South Shore League meets come next spring.

And when the fall sports season swings into action a year from now, the schedule will include night games for the football, soccer and field hockey teams, and an anticipated higher spectator turnout.

The $775,000 athletic facility project is right on schedule and shows no sign of letting up.

First-year Principal Curt Collins recently toured the construction area for the first time with Athletic Director Clark Chatterton and Alan Sawchuck, who, along with Chatterton, is overseeing the project. "Things are right on schedule," said Collins.

Expansions for the lights have been put in and seeding of the field should begin within the next four to five weeks. Conduit work has also been done.

The project calls for the construction of a new field in the location where the tennis courts and parking lot are currently located. Bathroom accessibility in the high school during sporting events will be improved with the new location.
